Probate courts remain open for business during COVID-19 crisis

PUTNAM — The Office of the Probate Court Administrator confirmed that the state's 54 Probate Courts and 6 Regional Children's Probate Courts continue court operations through the COVID-19 crisis. The Probate Court judges and clerks are essential workers and continue to conduct probate matters without public-facing operations. Hearings are conducted telephonically whenever possible. Video-conferencing capabilities for hearings are being rolled out statewide.

"The Northeast Probate Court and the Northeast Regional Children's Court located in Putnam are operating and are available by phone or email. The court staff is committed to serving the people of the district during these difficult times," said Judge Leah Schad.

Probate Courts have jurisdiction over matters which directly affect families in the most challenging times in their lives such as protecting a vulnerable child or adult through guardianship or conservatorship proceedings, coping with assets after the death of a loved one, and protecting the rights of individuals in psychiatric treatment. In these unprecedented times, the Probate Courts are handling an increased caseload of petitions for custody of a decedent's remains and for end-of-life medical treatment situations of conserved persons. The courts are prepared to hear appeals of quarantine or isolation orders.

"We are committed to protecting the health and safety of our Probate Court community while ensuring that our court operations continue. Our courts remain open to the public by telephone, eFiling and mail to handle all matters including those critical to families during the COVID-19 crisis. We are also prepared to hear any appeals of quarantine or isolation orders should those orders be issued," said Judge Beverly K. Streit-Kefalas, Probate Court Administrator.

It is recommended that individuals access the courts' on-line user guides in English and Spanish and register for the eFiling system if they are a party to a probate case. eFiling allows parties to file petitions, make payments and conduct most types of Probate Court business electronically on a 24/7 basis. The public is encouraged to call their local court for telephone guidance; the Northeast Court at 860-928-4844 and the Northeast Children's Court at 860-928-4833.

Dennehy remembered as a "good neighbor"

BY BRENDAN BERUBE
EDITOR

WOODSTOCK — The entertainment world lost a titanic talent, and Connecticut one of its most treasured native sons, with the passing last week of award-winning actor Brian Dennehy.

The 81-year-old star of stage, screen, and television, who won two Tony Awards and a Golden Globe and was nominated for six prime-time Emmys during a career spanning more than four decades, died of cardiac arrest in New Haven on April 15.

With more than 180 film and television appearances to his credit, the powerfully built six-foot-three actor was known for an imposing presence that led to memorable roles in several hit films beginning in the late 1970s. He is perhaps best remembered, however, for his breakout performance opposite Sylvester Stallone as a small town sheriff who harasses drifter John Rambo, with dire results, in the 1982 thriller "First Blood," which launched the popular Rambo franchise.

Stallone praised Dennehy in an Instagram post as a "great actor" who helped him build the character of Rambo.

"The world has lost a great artist," he wrote.

Dennehy was born in Bridgeport on July 9, 1938, and relocated to Mineola, Long Island with his family as a child, graduating from Chaminade High School. Although he was encouraged by a teacher to pursue an acting career, he tried at first to focus his energy on sports, enrolling at Columbia University on a football scholarship in 1956. Following military service in the Marine Corps, he earned a graduate degree in dramatic arts at Yale and held down a series of jobs over the next several years,

Local food pantry continues to serve community

BY KAREN BUTERA
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

PUTNAM — Even though the Daily Bread Food Pantry, located at the Living Faith United Methodist Church at 51-53 Grove St. in Putnam had to make adjustments to their programs, they are still going strong and helping out about 300 families per month. The program is privately funded and is run by a Board of Directors.

Karen Osbrey, President of Interfaith Human services- IHSP could be found on Saturday doing what she loves to do, serving the local communities at the food pantry.

"We had to make changes and adjust to a different model due to the Corona Virus," she said. "Before this, people use to go in and shop with one of the volunteers and they were able to pick their choice of food off of the shelves. Today we are making food choices that are packaged ahead of time. Before we had between 12-15 people in an hour. Now it is only four per hour. We use to have five or six volunteers at a time and now there are only a couple of volunteers to meet the social distancing guidelines."

The people that take advantage of the food pantry must now call 860-928-0769 to set up an appointment. Appointments are made every fifteen minutes. This gives the clients enough time to choose their own produce from the Farmer's Market. Osbrey also lets them know what additional items she has available that they can have. This keeps the number of people picking up food down to

Day Kimball Healthcare receives protective equipment from community

PUTNAM — Day Kimball Healthcare (DKH) has sought donations of medical supplies from organizations and individuals across Northeast Connecticut in the wake of shortages of personal protective equipment (PPE) caused by the COVID-19 pandemic. Since the original call for materials just three weeks ago, DKH has received donations of variety of PPE supplies from over 85 individuals, organizations, businesses and manufacturers.

"We continue to be humbled by the generosity of the community as we all navigate this difficult situation together," said Kristen Willis, director of development, Day Kimball Healthcare. "Support has come to us in a number of ways including donations of PPE, restaurant owners and individuals preparing and delivering meals for our staff, and monetary donations with messages of gratitude and inspiration. The outpouring of support has been amazing, but we still need the help of our community."

In collaboration with the Northeast District Department of Health for the procurement of these critical supplies, DKH continues to accept PPE donations from the community to keep colleagues, patients and families safe during these unprecedented times.

Donated items must be in original, unopened packaging. Equipment being accepted by DKH include: disposable head covers; disposable gowns; disposable gloves; N95 respirator face masks; disposable face masks; face-shields/goggles; coveralls/scrubs; shoe-covers; disinfection wipes and liquids; and general-purpose hand cleaners and hand sanitizers. DKH is also accepting homemade face masks.

Visit www.daykimball.org/donatePPE for information on donating supplies.

In addition, DKH is accepting monetary donations to the DKH COVID-19 Response Fund which will be put to use immediately to provide critical supplies, equipment and resources in response to this rapidly evolving pandemic.

As the COVID-19 crisis continues, DKH is adapting

WEAVER

I'm writing this the week after Easter, and must admit that it's been very rough one. I've lost one of my long-time "history friends," Louise Cutler Pempek of Putnam's Aspinock Historical Society. We go back a long way, to the early 1970's when that society was formed and over the years worked on a number of projects together. When I wrote my first edition of "Perspectives of Putnam," published in 1980, she was one of my editors and then served in that capacity for the update. During Walktober last fall I had the great pleasure working with Louise on a walk at the Cady-Copp Cottage. What a treasure she was as a friend and as a resident of Northeastern Connecticut where she generously gave of her talents and time. I am grateful to have had her as part of my life, and she will long live in my memories.

As I was researching last week's column, I realized that there were several strikes that were having an adverse impact on businesses in both Killingly and Putnam in April 1920. The first I came across was a railroad strike that meant the Goodyear Company, the factory in present-day Rogers, which made use of the railroads in the area, needed alternative forms of transportation between its Killingly and Akron, Ohio plants. The April 15, 1920 Norwich Bulletin had the following intriguing article: "One hundred five-ton motor trucks were being assembled here Wednesday by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company for use in transporting tire fabric from their plant at Goodyear to the parent plant at Akron, Ohio. The tie-up of railroad transportation facilities is responsible for the emergency arrangement made by this great corporation with its characteristic energy and forceful manner of doing things. A group of eight of the giant trucks each carrying five tons of fabric, left here just before noon on Tuesday, and five more of them, similarly loaded, got away late in the afternoon. Fifteen more trucks were expected arrive from New York at any minute...and the remainder of the 100 trucks will have arrived at Goodyear, loaded and started on their westward journey of more than 800 miles within the next 30 hours. While the plant at Goodyear is becoming glutted with finished fabric, the plant at Akron is rapidly running out of the material and it is absolutely necessary that the loads now being sent overland be put through to Ohio before the beginning of next week to prevent the Akron plant, where 37,000 employes (sic) are engaged, from being tied up in his tire making departments... The Goodyear Tire and Rubber company has for several years been operating its own overland trucking system between Danielson, Goodyear, and Akron...It is figured that the trucks will be two weeks in making the round trip. Coming east they will bring tires, rubber soles and other products of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company" (p. 6; newspapers.com).

I was curious about the railroad strike, and https://libcom.org/history/us-national-railroad-strike-1919-jeremy-brecher provided interesting background information. "There were a large number of strikes in 1919, many of which were "outlaw" or wildcat strikes, opposed as heartily by the unions as by the employers. Those railroad strikes which occurred met the opposition not only of the railroads but of the unions and the government. This was all the more true during the war and post-war period because the railroads were under Federal control until March, 1920. Discontent rose with the cost of living; by April, 1920, prices had risen one hundred percent since 1914, railroad wages only fifty percent. After April, 1919, the government refused all requests for wage increases... In this charged situation, a railroad worker named John Gru-nau, a leader of an insurgent Chicago Yardmen's Association, was demoted in the Chicago yards on April 2. The 700 switchmen on his line immediately walked out in protest. The strike crystallized the general discontent of the railroad workers, and within two days every railroad in the Chicago area was involved in the strike, with 9,000 switchmen out. By April 9th, the strike had spread spontaneously across the country..." The site noted, "This text has been excerpted from Jeremy Brecher's excellent book, Strike! and very slightly edited to make sense as a stand-alone text by libcom.org."

Apparently the passenger trains were not affected as much. "Putnam was not experiencing any discomforting effects of the outlaw railroad strike on Tuesday, though the movement of freight through this city had decidedly slowed up. If this situation continues for any protracted length of time, it will cause serious difficulties to manufacturers..." On Tuesday, heavy shipments were coming here by express, chiefly from New England points...All of the usual passenger trains are continuing service through here...though the Boston-New York expresses were not to be depended upon for the usual through service between the cities mentioned" (Norwich Bulletin 4/14/1920, p. 6; newspapers.com).

In Putnam, the Manhansett Manufacturing Company was affected by a strike in January 1920. "Carpenters employed on the new addition to the Manhansett Manufacturing company's plant here were out on strike Saturday. It was stated that the labor trouble developed as the result of mill employees, who are not members of the carpenters' union, being sent in to help to nailing down heavy flooring in the new part of the mill. The carpenters resented this addition to their ranks and walked off the job. The company, which is doing a splendid business and is a big factor in Putnam's industrial prosperity, is anxious to get its addition completed in order that machinery may be installed and employment given to an additional number of operatives, and for this reason alone sent in the helpers to rush along the construction work" (Norwich Bulletin, January 20, 1920, p. 6; newspapers.com).

I had asked for memories so will share one that Dave Doiron sent.

"One interesting story of downtown Danielson actually happened to my dad back in the late 1950s. Dad read two or three daily newspapers and would drive to Dowe's to pick them up. The store had a set of newspaper tubes for customers who always got one of the daily newspapers. So Dad would get his Norwich Bulletin in the morning before heading to work. This particular day, since it was so early, he was the only one parked on that side of the street. He had a habit of leaving the engine running while he got the paper. It had an automatic transmission, so he's put it in Park, but he wouldn't bother with the parking brake. He was chatting with Marshall Dowe when one of them noticed his car wasn't in front of the store. Dad ran outside and saw the car headed down the street. It apparently had slipped out of Park. It crossed the street and took out a parking meter and ended up against a utility pole near Woolworth's. Dad was devastated. He walked back to Dowe's, and his friend Marshall managed to calm him down. (emails, April 4 & 14). If you remember Dowe's and/or Woolworth's, please share your memories.

I'll include more memories in next weeks' column. If you have something to share, please email or put it in a letter to the Killingly Historical Society. Please do not call the Killingly Historical Center with them until after the Covie-19 restrictions have been removed. Thank you so much for sharing.

Day Kimball Medical Group to open drive-up collection site for COVID-19 testing

PUTNAM — Day Kimball Medical Group (DKMG), the physician practices of Day Kimball Healthcare (DKH), has announced that it will open a drive-up collection site for COVID-19 testing beginning on Thursday, April 16.

The community-based drive-up collection site will be located at the Killingly Intermediate School located at 1599 Upper Maple Street in Dayville, Connecticut. The collection site will be open from 2 to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Weekend hours will be determined over time to best serve the needs of the community.

“At a challenging time like this, it is more important than ever for health care institutions to come together and mobilize every resource possible to help their communities,” said John Graham, MD, chief medical officer and vice president of quality and medical affairs, Day Kimball Healthcare. “It is our hope that establishing this collection site for COVID-19 testing in the region will enable more people to access the care they need close to home.”

Only patients who have been evaluated by a health care provider for COVID-19 symptoms and who have a valid prescription order from their physician may be tested at the drive-up collection site. On-demand or walk-up testing is not available at this location.

To obtain a test order, patients with COVID-19 symptoms such as cough, fever, and shortness of breath should contact their health care provider to be evaluated for their symptoms. Once the individual is determined to be a candidate for testing, the clinician will submit a physician order for the COVID-19 test. Physician orders will be processed immediately upon receipt, and the patient will be contacted directly by DKMG and set up with the first available collection appointment.

“Community-based collection sites are meant to decompress hospital emergency departments and physicians’ offices, preserve personal protective equipment, and centralize testing options,” said Gerald Sullivan, MD, family medicine physician, Day Kimball Medical Group. “The drive-up collection site will minimize unnecessary visits into clinical offices, waiting rooms, and hospital emergency departments, mitigating the potential spread of COVID-19.”

At the drive-up location, on-site signage will direct patients to the secure drive-up collection area. Patients will stay in their vehicles where a health care worker will verbally verify the patient’s identity and then perform the swab. If there is more than one person in the vehicle, each person will need a valid prescription order to be tested.

“The entire sampling, collection and storage process will take place outside of the school building. The collected specimens will be stored in a cooler outside and will then be transported to Day Kimball’s laboratory on a daily basis. No potentially contaminated personal protective equipment, materials, or specimens will be brought inside the school,” Sullivan confirmed.

Those who have been directed to the drive-thru location should be aware of the following:

- Patients who do not have a provider’s order will not be tested.
- Patients will need to bring with them a valid photo ID to the collection site.
- Patients will drive through a secured, marked area and will remain in their vehicles throughout the entire collection process.
- No outdoor restrooms will available at the collection location.
- The sample is collected via a nasal swab; the process typically takes less than 30 seconds.
- The sample will be tested for the novel coronavirus.
- Individuals will be contacted directly with their results within two or three days, depending on regional test volume. As volumes increase, wait times for results may be longer.
- No medical screening or on-site medical evaluation will be performed.
- While waiting for their test results, individuals should stay at home. Those who receive positive COVID-19 test results may be issued additional care orders or self-isolation orders.

“At DKH, we continue to take steps to protect our patients, their families, and our caregivers from the risk of exposure to infectious disease,” Graham said. “The drive-up collection site is one of several steps we have taken to keep our community safe and mitigate the potential spread of the virus.”

For the latest information, refer to the CDC website www.cdc.gov, and the CT DPH website www.ct.gov/coronavirus. Local measures to contain the spread of the virus are available at Day Kimball Healthcare’s website www.daykimball.org/coronavirus. Updates can also be viewed at Day Kimball Healthcare’s Facebook and Instagram channels.

Local student attends Model UN Conference

DUDLEY, Mass. — Seven students from Nichols College attended the North American Model United Nations Conference at the University of Toronto, Victoria College campus, on February 20-22, 2020. Model United Nations is a program that aims to build and maintain strong links between the UN and Model UN participants around the world by providing students hands-on experience through real-world issues simulated at conferences.

Olivia Antonson, of North Grosvenordale, Conn. was accompanied by Erika Smith, assistant professor of political science and international business and chair of political science, and Karol Gil-Vasquez, assistant professor of economics.

The Nichols contingent served on committees representing Equatorial Guinea on the African Commission for Human and Peoples’ Rights, Malaysia on the World Health Organization, and Agrarian Party of Russia for the delegation Constituent Assembly of Russia, and others.

The Model UN conference is the ultimate test of knowledge for students studying politics, international business, and economics. They are not allowed to use cell phones or laptops while in sessions and are pushed to react, debate and make decisions on knowledge from past studies and preparation before presenting their positions to the conference at large for a vote. Nichols students felt that they had a unique advantage excelling at presentations in front of the group because of the numerous class presentations they are required to perform as part of their Nichols education.

“It is a very fast paced environment, and it forces you to use your memory. It is a great way to test our knowledge and see what we retained. I was impressed with myself on how much I remembered from my classes!” says Rebecca Khachikian.

Khachikian further reflects on her experience, “I’d love to be a foreign services officer for the US State Department, and this experience helped me confirm that this is a career path that I’d like to take.”

Tyler Dunn, a sophomore at Nichols College with a double major in international business and economics and a minor in political science, was recognized with the Outstanding Delegate Award. He encourages future students to take advantage of participating in Model UN. “If you are someone that likes problem solving, working in a collaborative environment, and enjoys debating policy, it is a very fun and rewarding experience,” he says.

About Nichols College

Nichols College is a college of choice for business and leadership education as a result of its distinctive career-focused and leadership-based approaches to learning, both in and out of the classroom, and through impactful research and professional education. Students thrive in a learning and living environment that is supported by an experiential business curriculum and a strong liberal arts foundation aimed at transforming them into tomorrow’s leaders. Nichols also offers master’s degrees in business, leadership, accounting, and counterterrorism, as well as a range of certificate programs, to promote career advancement for today’s professionals.

including stints as a delivery driver, butcher, bartender, and stockbroker (a job he later said he hated), while trying to establish himself in the theater. Early stage roles in New York landed him minor parts in the films “Looking for Mr. Goodbar” and “Semi-Tough” in 1977. The late ‘70s also saw him making a string of guest appearances on television, where his credits would eventually include “Kojak,” “M*A*S*H,” “Dallas,” and “Dynasty.”

Following the massive success of “First Blood,” Dennehy established himself as one of Hollywood’s foremost character actors, making memorable appearances in such diverse films as the science fiction classic “Cocoon,” the crime thriller “F/X” and its sequel, the star-studded Western “Silverado,” the courtroom drama “Presumed Innocent,” and the slapstick comedy “Tommy Boy.” He also cultivated a thriving career as a leading man on television, delivering an acclaimed portrayal of serial killer John Wayne Gacy in the 1992 miniseries “To Catch a Killer” and headlining a series of popular made-for-television movies as Chicago detective Jack Reed, five of which he also directed, beginning with 1992’s “Deadly Matrimony.”

It was on the stage, however, that Dennehy would achieve his greatest success, earning a Tony Award for his portrayal of Willy Loman in Arthur Miller’s “Death of a Salesman” in 1999 (a role for which he also won a Golden Globe and a Screen Actor’s Guild Award when the production aired on television). His second Tony came in 2003 for Eugene O’Neill’s “Long Day’s Journey Into Night,” in which he appeared opposite Vanessa Redgrave and Philip Seymour Hoffman. He would go on to garner a reputation as the American theater’s foremost interpreter of O’Neill’s works, delivering searing performances in acclaimed productions of “The Iceman Cometh,” “Desire Under the Elms,” “A Touch of the Poet,” and “Hughie.”

A longtime resident of Joy Road in Woodstock, Dennehy was remembered by scores of area residents on social media in the days following his passing as friendly and kind hearted, a familiar face at stores and restaurants in neighboring Putnam, along with his children.

The Pomfret School’s Theater Director, Chip Lamb, recalled Dennehy in a letter to the Villager as “an accomplished man” and a “good neighbor” who was “helpful, gracious, and kind.”

“Brian’s son and my daughter were in the same class at Pomfret School, and when he heard that our chorus was struggling to raise the funds to travel to Bolivia, he stepped up and organized a benefit performance,” Lamb wrote.

Dennehy, he remembered, became a close friend who once sent Lamb a personal note complimenting Lamb’s own performance in a local production of “The Crucible,” and took time after a grueling performance of “The Iceman Cometh” to meet with Lamb in his dressing room.

“Helpful. Gracious. Kind. These are the qualities of a good neighbor,” Lamb wrote. “These are the lessons I learned from Brian; lessons that seem more important than ever. Lessons that may not have a lot to do with acting, but have everything to do with living.”

Dennehy was married twice, to Judith Scheff (who passed away in 2015) and later to Jennifer Arnott. He is survived by his three daughters with Scheff, Elizabeth, Kathleen, and Deirdre, as well as Arnott and their children, Cormac and Sarah.

The Daughters of Isabella recently celebrated their annual Tea and membership recruitment event. Forty members attended, including 12 guests.

PUTNAM—The Daughters of Isabella recently celebrated their annual Tea and membership recruitment event. Forty members attended, including 12 guests. Patricia Krodel, a local storyteller, entertained with a humorous Irish tale. Joy Lizotte and Jennifer Lombardo offered an informative and historical skit which gave the background of the organization from its beginning to the present. Sandra Montie, the secretary and membership chairperson, coordinated group participation in furthering the goals and mission of the group. It was a wonderful afternoon, enjoyed by all.

The Daughters of Isabella is a charitable organization of Catholic Women founded on the principles of Unity, Friendship and Charity. To fulfil our goals the group hosts charitable activities, fund raising events and social interactions to encourage the community in a positive way to support and assist one another. We have sponsored Red Cross Blood Drives, Boy Scout activities, Hospice Tree of Life Lighting ceremony to name a few, and individual members volunteer at Daily Bread, The Community Kitchen, visit the sick, support St. Jude’s Hospital and many others.

After this event, three new members were installed bringing the total membership to 64. We encourage women of the Catholic faith to join us. We offer open meetings occasionally to recruit new membership and anyone who may be interested in joining may call our Regent: Maureen Desilets (860-928-5644) or Secretary, Sandra Monte (860-963-9552).

one person at a time. The other change is no one is able to go inside the building anymore.

According to Osbrey, “We have expanded our hours and added deliveries to seniors. Since appointments are made as needed, some days are longer than others.”

The towns served are Putnam, Pomfret and Woodstock, but they will never turn away the homeless or veterans.

One of the other services that the Daily Bread provided was NU2U, a clothing closet that has been temporarily shut down. They are also unable to accept clothing at this time.

A popular and much needed program is The Diaper Bank. The main location is at IHSP, Daily Bread. The hours of operation are Tuesday evenings from 5-6:30 p.m., and Putnam clients can pick up diapers during their regular food pick up. Towns served are Putnam, Pomfret, Thompson, Woodstock, Eastford, Ashford, Killingly, Brooklyn, Chaplin, Hampton, Canterbury, Scotland, Oneco, Sterling, and the Plainfield area. Husky cards need to be presented. For those outside of the Putnam area, diapers can be picked up at TEEG on the second Friday of the month. You must call 923-3458 for an appointment. The Plainfield Early Learning Center is open on the 3rd Wednesday of the month from 10:30 a.m. through 1 p.m., no appointment is needed. For Ashford Social Services you must call 487-4417 to complete an application and arrange to pick up the diapers. The United Methodist Church of Danielson is open on last Friday of the month from 10:30 a.m. through 1 p.m. No appointment is needed.

DKH Nurturing Families, Killingly-Goodyear Family Resource Center and Generations Family Health Center are also distributing diapers. When a child is ready for potty training, Potty Training Kits consisting of a potty seat, activity books, crayons, and a hint sheet are provided upon request.

“We also provide Heating Assistance, Rental Assistance, Homeless Support and Pathways to Success by appointment. In the summer, we provide the Summer Food Program and during the school year, School Snacks,” said Osbrey.

Along with all of these services the food pantry is able to help point clients in the right direction for other services that may be needed. You may call 860-928-0769 for an appointment for Daily Bread or for any of their other services.

Pomfret Lions offer scholarships

THOMPSON — Thompson Speedway Motorsports Park announced last Friday that the 46th annual Liquid Death Icebreaker, originally rescheduled for May 15-16, will not happen during that weekend.

We continue to work with local and public health officials during the COVID-19 pandemic. We are in constant communication with NASCAR about rescheduling the event and will have further updates when available.

To be eligible, applicants must be residents of Pomfret and must complete and return an application before May 20. The application requires a school transcript, a reference, and several brief paragraphs in addition to personal information. An application may be requested from the following address: Lions Club Scholarship, Box 224, Pomfret, CT.

Rotary members become fundraising machines

PUTNAM — Before the COVID 19 virus put the brakes on the Putnam Rotary Club's fund-raising, the club was able to raise an impressive $110,000 for local groups and an international water project.

Club President Richard Naumann said the club recently made donations totaling $110,000.

The funds came from the Lobster Fest, the ever-popular Rose Sale, its 2-20 game, the golf tournament and grants awarded by the Rotary Foundation, Rotary District and Rotary International. In addition, each Rotarian has made generous donations to the club throughout the year, in various ways.

Beneficiaries include: Arc of Eastern Connecticut, Camp Quinebaug, Community Café, Daily Bread, Day Kimball Healthcare, NECT Cancer Fund, NOW, Richard Franklin Memorial Fund, Scouting, Shelterbox USA, TEEG, United Services, Windham-Tolland 4-H Foundation, Hale YMCA, scholarships. In addition to those local beneficiaries, the club is helping to fund an international project -- the Ecuador Water Project. The Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association and the Bungay Fire Brigade also received donations for equipment.

Extend your garden season

No matter where you garden, there never seems to be enough time to grow all the fresh vegetables desired. Planting earlier or just providing plants with some added warmth on chilly days and nights can reduce the time from planting to harvest. Southern gardeners will enjoy the additional time for harvesting heat-sensitive plants before the stifling heat moves in and plants begin to decline.

Prepare the soil as soon as it can be worked. Cover the prepared soil with clear plastic, row covers or high tunnels for several weeks when planting earlier than normal. This warms the soil for planting and helps germinate many of the weed seeds. Lightly cultivate to remove the young weed seedlings without bringing more weed seeds to the surface. You'll be pulling fewer weeds throughout the growing season.

Once the garden is planted, enlist some of these season-extending helpers (gardeners.com). Homemade and commercial cloches, cold frames and row covers can help you plant earlier and harvest later in the season.

Row covers made of spun fabrics let air, light, and water through while keeping the plants warm. Anchor the fabric with landscape pins, stones, boards, or other heavy items. Leave enough slack in the fabrics for the plants to grow. Lighter weight garden fabrics also protect plants from insect pests like cabbage worms and bean beetles.

GARDEN MOMENTS

Garden covers take this method one step further. These structures fit over plantings in the garden, raised beds or elevated planters. Look for those with durable greenhouse fabric covers that let water in and keep excess heat out. These types of structures protect plants from cold and wind, speeding up your harvest by as much as 25 percent.

Raise the roof on these structures with high tunnels and plant protection tents. These are perfect for growing tall plants like tomatoes. As temperatures rise, the tops can be ventilated or in some cases replaced with a mesh that keeps out insects and critters, while providing plants enough room to reach full size.

Or maybe you just can't wait for that first red ripe tomato and only want to jump start a row of greens. Garden cloches have long been used for this purpose. They capture the sun's warmth to protect plants from frosty weather.

Gardener's Supply Company's Early Season Row Cloche Set allows you to expand your protection to the desired size. These clear PVC plant protectors have water wells to capture rainwater and gently disperse it to the plants below and vents for managing the temperature.

Further boost your tomato harvest with red plastic mulch, red tomato teepees and tomato boosters. University researchers found using red plastic mulch increased the individual fruit size and weight and overall tomato harvest by as much as 20 percent. They found the red plastic mulch reflected certain growth-enhancing wavelengths of light back onto the plants.

With a bit of extra effort and investment you'll be harvesting fresh vegetables long before your friends and neighbors. Then be sure to keep these season-extending devices handy to use again in fall. Protecting plants from those first few fall frosts can keep you eating garden-fresh tomatoes, peppers and greens well into winter.

Antiquing during this health crisis

Many antique events and auctions have been canceled due to the Coronavirus pandemic. The usual online selling and buying options are still available though, and some new opportunities have even become available.

The biggest local antique news is that the May Brimfield Antique Show has been canceled. Westernmassnews.com quoted the Head of the Brimfield Select Board who said "I think when you get 20,000 people coming from around the world, it'd be disastrous ... I think everybody is sad for it. I don't necessarily apologize for the decision because I think it's the right one." Although this is disappointing to antique dealers and collectors, in my opinion July 2020 will be one of the best shows. Many other shows have also been canceled. Live auctions and estate sales have been put on hold. Antiques and the Arts Weekly has a long "running list" of many of the canceled events available on their website at antiquesandthearts.com.

ANTIQUES, COLLECTIBLES & ESTATES

Like many other local businesses, antique dealers, auctioneers and estate sale companies have been going online to fill the void. For example, some estate sale companies are running online only sales. Others are selling by appointment only to comply with social distancing guidelines.

Channel 7 News in Watertown, N.Y. reported that auctioneer Don Peck Auctions has turned to Facebook Live to run his auctions which had been held live in person prior to the pandemic. Peck said that prices have increased as he has found a group of new bidders. Most buyers are from within 50 to 75 miles of his Gouverneur, N.Y. location, but he has reached others from as far away as Florida and Las Vegas.

The pandemic has brought out the best in many. Many public figures have done exceptional things to help those affected by the COVID-19 virus. Former Ohio Buckeyes and Detroit Lions linebacker Chris Spielman is one example. The Detroit Free Press reported that he had previously donated $100 each to 8 people who were in need for the past two weeks. He is now selling some of his personal memorabilia on eBay to help those in need during this pandemic. His Ohio State Big Ten championship ring is one of his prized possessions that he is auctioning for the greater good. "This hurts to give this up, but where is it going to serve a better purpose?" Spielman said. The ring sold for $12,000, and Spielman said he will be offering more of his memorabilia.

Our company is practicing physical distancing, along with the rest of the state. If you are handling an estate or just have some items in your home that you think may be valuable and would like some guidance, we can virtually view and evaluate them. You can contact us by email or phone to schedule an appointment using Facetime, Zoom or Skype.

We are also planning an online auction in Warren, R.I. and an estate sale in Auburn when the situation allows. Our Rutland estate farm auction will go online again as soon as possible. Please see www.centralmassauctions.com for details on these and other events. I hope all of you continue to stay safe and in good health and we can all be attending antique events together soon.

The lost class of 2020

When schools across the country moved to remote learning, we weren't sure how long it would last, but many of us suspected that eventually it would last for the remainder of the year.

Many students use school as a respite and several thrive on having a consistent schedule. Younger students are facing many losses, but our hearts truly break for the seniors, particularly athletes who are missing out on their final sports season.

In our own experience, it was track season that would have had the most impact. As a senior, records needed to be broken, goals needed to be reached and rivals needed to be beat. To have that season abruptly "taken" would have been devastating. Thinking back, time spent on a Saturday at a sunny track meet with talented athletes, encouraging coaches and parents with coolers loaded with food are some of, if not the best, memories from high school.

Then there are softball and baseball players. Baseball, in all its various incarnations, is called the 'American pastime' for a very good reason. The adrenaline rush that comes after managing to hit an expertly thrown pitch and sprinting to first base is unforgettable. Making a catch in the outfield, or making the play for that all important out that could decide the game, is gold. Fortunately, many athletes are going on to play ball or run track in college. For those that are not, know that we sympathize with you, and hope that you can continue doing what you love in some sort of league that will hopefully be available to you. No, it won't be the same, but this is when they say you need to "adjust your sails" and remember that what is happening is in order to keep you and your families safe.

Again, we know that all of our students, parents, faculty, healthcare workers, business owners and all community members are going through a loss, all to varying degrees but all just as important. For students, whether it's the last school theatre production or JROTC competition, we feel for you. Have faith that your administration will make up for all of this, as best they can, given the circumstances.

Certainly, our students understand the gravity of the situation. Lives are being lost, families are losing loved ones and people are heart broken. We are in the midst of a global pandemic, but that doesn't mean that the devastation those students are feeling shouldn't matter. We acknowledge your pain. Reading a recent Facebook post by a friend's daughter brought the situation home to us. In an emotional letter to her fellow members of the Class of 2020, she wrote that if she had one wish, it would be to go back to the last day of classes before the governor's office made the decision to close schools, with the knowledge this time that those eight precious hours would be the end of her senior year, and give all of her classmates — many of whom she might never have an opportunity to see together in one place again — one last hug or high-five before saying good bye.

Her words speak for all students across our region, and across the country, who have been denied the opportunity to experience one of the most memorable times in a young person's life, and we invite our readers to join us in recognizing the pain, comforting the sorrow, and above all, saluting the achievements and incredible fortitude of the Class of 2020.

Putnam has shown a commitment to funding education

To the Editor:
The chairman of the Putnam Board of Education recently criticized the Putnam Board of Finance for offering the Board of Education a budget of $18,794,001 instead of the $19,622,420 requested. He argued that the town should use its reserve funds to offset potential mill increases during this challenging period.

I disagree. I think the town officials are right in refusing to use the reserve fund this year. We are just at the beginning of a virus-induced crisis with no idea of what its duration or ripple effects will be. We may well be in greater need of the reserve money further down the road.

Mr. Morrill also implied that Putnam officials do not really support the town's schools. This concerned me, so I looked on the State Department of Education Web site to see what information it might offer. The Department lists data on total school expenditures, enrollments, and per pupil expenditures for each town in Connecticut. I found that for the school years 2008-09 through 2017-18, Putnam increased its school expenditures every year except 2010-11 and 2015-16. Per pupil expenditures increased steadily over the same period, rising from $13,913 in 2008-09 to $17,192 in 2017-18. Keeping in mind that the State ranks Putnam among the bottom 20 towns in terms of wealth and property tax base, it's clear that the town has shown a real commitment to funding its schools and educating its children.

A thought on 'free'

To the Editor:
Some weeks ago, I read a letter in this newspaper that stated, "nothing is free." However, when we simply stop and think about it, there are so many things all around us that are free; think about sunlight and the warmth it gives us, and the rain, to quench our thirst and fill our wells, and the air we breathe, these are some of the most important things our planet offers, and they are all free. But I believe the writer was speaking about some of the more social ideals such as healthcare and college tuition.

Of course, these things are not free in the usual sense of the word, but what is proposed is to make them free to the user, as we currently do for children from grades kindergarten thru high school. As we know, K through 12 education is not free in the usual sense of the word, but the user does not pay as he goes. When my two children were in school, my town's real estate tax bill covered less than one third of the per pupil cost to the town. You might say I was not paying my fair share of what it cost the town to educate my children. But the fact is that everyone who lived in town also paid taxes, even though many of them had no children in the school system. Now that my children are grown and out of school, I still pay my town taxes, and my tax dollar helps to pay the cost for the children now in school.

Isn't this exactly what we do with all of the benefits society finds beneficial? The taxes we pay provide post offices, roads, airports, passenger trains, and hundreds of others, and we pay for them whether we use them or not. More important to society, although neglected, are the benefits of education and healthcare. Proven by many studies, the healthier the population, means less healthcare and thereby lower healthcare costs. Yearly physicals can detect problems before they become acute, medical help with weight loss will, for many of us, reduce diabetes and other ailments, moderate exercise tends to lower heart problems, and a healthy diet will go a long way to reducing many current health problems; these are all healthcare issues. Several recent polls show most Americans also want a universal, single-payer healthcare system, and it has become obvious it will happen in the United States sooner rather than later.

Who do we believe?

To the Editor:
Thanks for making me aware of Donald Trump's past business adventures. I didn't even know that he had his own brand of vodka, but I probably would have paid more attention if he had put out his own brand of beer. Yet for all those mentioned failures, he is a billionaire and the President of the United States. (I only wish that I had done so poorly in life.) But then all of his business dealings are shady, right? And though I could mention any number of other people who are in the same boat, I won't because what good will it do?

Thanks also for your (U.S.) COVID statistics. I can only hope that you are not totally blaming the President for those numbers. Yes, the death figures are sad, and unfortunately, there is no magic wand. All I've heard as of late is that the President did not act soon enough in his handling of the COVID issue. How about, instead of only being spoon fed by the likes of Rachel Maddow or Anderson Cooper, you "no fans" open up your minds for just a minute and check out the Bill Maher/Congressman, Dan Crenshaw exchange? (Food for thought?)

One step backward taken

The lady bugs are back. They aren't as numerous as other years, but they are, sticking to the corners of the windows and dropping into shoes and on to sheets. They are "alien" or non-native little creatures, closer to orange in color than red with black spots, but they have settled in and they plan to stay. They are joined by "Asian" stink bugs, that also hitchhiked in somehow. The natural world adjusts and so must we.

NANCY WEISS

April is poetry month. Through the years, I have shared poems I enjoy. I memorize poems for the sheer pleasure of recalling lines at odd moments and to calm myself in the middle of the night. Sometimes poems I thought I understood reemerge as meaning something else. Writing poems focuses the mind, another area where we must adjust. If we can keep our attention on what truly matters, we will emerge from these strange times with new insight, or at least tidier closets.

I'm always impressed by two magazines, Yankee and Down East, we've gotten for years. In Yankee, I enjoy the celebration of New England life presented without a saccharine-sweet tone. In a recent piece, read on the internet as I avoid my beloved post office, Mel Allen, the editor referenced a poem by Robert Frost called, "One Step Backward Taken."

The poem describes a time when after a storm or a flood, sand and boulders were tumbling down a gully. The poet then recalls, "I felt my standpoint shaken/In the universal crisis. /But with one step backward taken/I saved myself from going. /A world torn loose went by me. /Then the rain stopped and the blowing, /And the sun came out to dry me."

While we are waiting for the sun to come out, we have the time to slow down and think. Two close friends have lost their husbands since the virus shutdown began. Neither man died from corona, but because of quarantining, my friends, now widows, can't move ahead with traditional funerals, and the comfort of seeing relatives and friends. Both women are largely alone. Once this time is over, they will hold memorial services, but their isolation right now, except for the internet and phone calls, seems very cruel.

My husband and I walk outside every day. We wave to passers-by and chuckle at the dogs hanging out of car windows. When we come upon other walkers, everyone knows how to distance themselves, say something cheery and move on. Through binoculars, we spotted four turtles sunning themselves on a rock in a local pond and laughed when two little girls, neighbors we hadn't met, brought out three ferrets to show us as we stood on a country road. The ferrets wanted to be entertaining, so they burrowed into a stonewall. We smiled in the sunshine.

Every day, four of my friends and I write haikus and share them. As you may recall, haikus are based on a Japanese tradition of three lines of poetry with five syllables in the first and third line and seven in the middle. Haikus are often about nature and often have a surprise ending. We've taken to writing them with alacrity. The recent snow storm, spring blossoms, animals and even house cleaning provide great material. Being creative is a pleasant way to step backward and forward.

The "one step backward taken" is how we need to live for a while longer. When the sun comes out, we will join the insects, the turtles and the silky ferrets in adjusting to whatever the new world offers. We will save what we have learned.

A failure of leadership

To the Editor:
Historians of future generations are destined to look back on the Covid-19 global pandemic with the same fundamental awe as the two World Wars and the Great Depression. These few dreadful events were able to bring an entire world to its knees. One would have thought that the climate crisis would (and still may be) the source of our next fall from grace but nature seems to have found another trick up its sleeve. Still, as the chronicles of the 20th century have shown us, human kind did find solutions and those solutions were in no small part due to the emergence of the United States of America's becoming the great superpower it was always meant to be. Sadly, America leading the rest of the planet out of this disaster does not appear to be in the cards, in no small part due to the lack of leadership at the pinnacle of our government. Rather than guide a world teetering on the brink as we have done before, President Trump's strategy appears to be to point fingers elsewhere, take credit when none is due, and isolate the country when a worldwide agenda is called for.
Past administrations have for years been forewarned about the possibility of a deadly global pandemic. We had agencies that planned for it. But in spring 2018, the Trump administration began taking down the team in charge of a pandemic response along with deep cuts to the CDC all part of his desire to cut the size of the federal government.

Early in the course of the disease this year the administration ignored intelligence warnings as the President seemed more concerned with keeping the numbers low and likening the coronavirus to the flu as well as suggesting to his supporters that it all was a Democratic hoax.
He then picked Vice President Pence to head his response task force, a politician not a scientist. Yes, he declared a ban on Chinese nationals from entering the country but he failed to quarantine and test the thousands of Americans returning from Asia, bringing the infection with them.
In February, Trump said of the virus that "One day it's like a miracle, it will disappear," failing to grasp the basic science behind a deadly malady. He then in March decided that Easter would be the day that social distancing restrictions could be lifted again flying in the face of all rational evidence.
Throughout this year, he has continued to hype the use of hydroxychloroquine as a miracle cure even as doctors warned him that this was dangerous and as recent studies have borne out can cause more harm than good.
He has turned daily Covid 19 task force briefings into mini rallies allowing him to rail against Democratic governors and Congress as well as the press while continuing to spread falsehoods that America is leading the world in testing (its far behind per capita compared to other countries) and that hospitals are being provided all the PPE's and ventilators that they need. He states that we have passed the peak even as the numbers continue to rise in sections of the country, in part because the numbers can't be accurately assessed until we have more testing.

Now Trump wants to open up the country once more by first declaring that he had "total authority" and then saying that governors should decide, and at the same time egging on supporters who deny the seriousness of the pandemic. We have witnessed hundreds marching in crowds, without masks, on government state houses. He should explain to them that even though they may not fear getting or dying from coronavirus, they are potential sources that can spread it to others and prolong its duration.
He has created a reopen the economy task force and including his son in law and daughter, who are neither doctors, or scientists, or business leaders, or epidemiologists; they are just relatives.
But perhaps most disappointing is Trump abandoning America's role as a global leader. In defunding the WHO at a point when worldwide coordination against a health crisis has never in history been more important and failing to dictate a universal protocol, we risk creating a permanent vacuum in the Western world which no doubt will be filled by China. Yes, many can blame them for triggering the virus but this will be quickly forgotten as they become the leading world voice and economic superpower. Already, they are shipping medical supplies and providing health experts to less fortunate nations while effectively quelling the illness at home.

The pandemic will last for many months, if not for many years. Many lives will be lost. Many jobs will be lost forever. All this will be accelerated by an administration that feeds on half truths and outright lies and is willing to trade the wants of a few misguided xenophobes and one self centered narcissist for a damaged planet searching for a way out.
The end of this catastrophe will be led by science. Already there are 86 vaccine trials underway. Odds are at least one will prove effective. An effective treatment should also be discovered. Until that time, we will need to heed the advice of experts and stay the course. Mr. Trump needs to understand this. He needs to spearhead the national effort, stop treating the country as a business, and recognize this is no time to place gut feelings over coherent facts. He also needs to return America to its position as the world's beacon of hope. The chances of this happening, especially given his consistently erratic behavior, seem quite unlikely. And this is why, on the global playing field, China stands to come out the winner.

We are community strong

To the Editor:
Words do not do justice to describing the difficult times in which we are living. All of us face a common problem. Each of us faces our own individual challenges. It is OK to be anxious, nervous, or even scared about the future. It is OK to feel tired because of a changed work environment or a hectic work schedule. It is OK to feel stressed because of a high-risk circumstance if you are a healthcare worker, first responder, or employee at an essential job. It is OK to ask for help. Throughout it all, each of us can take hope in and have our spirits lifted up by the countless acts of kindness, generosity, and caring that are happening every day and every night in our communities.
If you are a worker who has been furloughed, support has been offered. If you are a worker who has experienced a pay cut, support has been offered. If you own a small business that has had to close shop or change the way things operate to try to stay afloat, support has been offered. If you are a retiree wondering if a pension or Social Security is enough to help, support has been offered. If you are a teacher, student, or parent, support has been offered. If you are food insecure or unable to help yourself due to age or infirmity, support has been offered.
Support is not only in the form of government assistance. Although federal, state, and municipal governments can be of help, it is not government's role to cover 100 percent of everything 100 percent of the time. It takes private citizens, private businesses, non-profit organizations, and religious places of worship to help do the work at local, grassroots levels. It is a partnership between government and private parties. But, it takes people to step in to do what government cannot do or cannot do fully. This is how things get done and get done well.
I find it unfortunate that there are politicians trying to score political points through special interest statements and actions. It is not for me to comment as to why there are individuals who chose to be pundits by making political arguments or lobbying charged comments.

What I do say and what I have said many times before, is that while it is OK to have a reasonable and reasoned discussion of public policy and to hold government accountable for its actions, it is more important concurrently to highlight the good work that people are doing and to support them in doing the good work as best as can be done realistically and effectively.
We are community strong. This is not new. This strength long predates the present public health emergency. It will last long after the pandemic is past us. During these current times, more people are noticing the strength of our communities and talking about it. We see more of it publicly. But, it has always been present, often times existing behind the scenes or anonymous.
That the goodness outnumber the bad is something each of us must remember and take faith in. We must work hard together to keep it this way. After the 9/11 tragedies, Ben Stein wrote a wonderful article about who are the true American heroes. His point was that average Americans, like first responders and even like you, are the true American heroes by doing good and by helping others. He ended his article by saying, "Faith is not believing that God can. It is knowing that God will." I will paraphrase this by saying, "Faith is not believing that people can do good things. It is knowing that people will and that they are already doing it."
To everyone and to each organization who have stepped out and stepped up to be of help, thank you. To each of you who needs a helping hand or a hand on your shoulder during these tough times, be aware that help is available, in various and many forms. Whether you help one person or help many, helping people does make a difference. Working together as a community is what will drive us through toward better times. Americans over the generations and the years have done it before more than once. America and our communities will do it again.
Stay safe. Stay healthy.

We are hearty folk

To the Editor:
As someone who grew up here in Windham county, moving to the south, I have always been proud to acknowledge us as "hearty folk." Out of sheer necessity, we adapt; like our military, we overcome.
During 9/11, we saw how hearty New Yorkers were. Then, we watched how our nation pulled together to overcome. Think of all the shootings and how we pull together as a whole to try to move forward.
Now we face a pandemic. It won't be our last. So many times I've wanted to add to this column, but there is just so much to talk about. I've decided to try and shoot for the optimism that is me. To project negativity isn't helpful at this time. However, I can't stress enough how important diligence with hand washing and isolation are in slowing down this pandemic. It is imperative. It is something we can all do to help-if possible, stay home.
I have always held faith for us as Americans. We enjoy a special privilege in our everyday life that can lead us to greatness. We are forward thinkers. People are contributing and making sense. As always, individuals are volunteering, stepping up to the plate. From small children to elderly, folks are doing the best they can. These times are when ingenuity excels.

As a relative of mine once said, "necessity is the mother of invention!" We are certainly seeing that in these times. Homemade PPE equipment, 3-D printers being used to make connections that give extra access to a single ventilator, small companies making headgear for ventilators, the conversion of C-pap machines to make ventilators. Folks are buying headbands, sewing buttons on the sides so that medical personal can attach face masks to them as their ears have sores and are painful from wearing masks for eight to 12 hours at a time. Folks are donating these ideas without compensation to a patent. They are just saying "here it is, take it and run with it, please." Capitalism out the window!
We need to understand and be supportive of the many frontline folks that are working to get us through this. We have David Yo, a Doctor who dis-

To the Editor:
It's quite the change that we are all going through. Pretty much everything we have been spending our time on has changed, and continues to change on a daily basis. That adjustment is difficult enough without the very real life-threatening virus that has caused it all. Yet, I continue to believe that this is all happening for a reason. The cause, response and coming together as a global community is an awakening to prioritize and just simply, do our best. As a very wise business associate once told me, "In time, all things will be revealed." When impatient, frustrated or discouraged, I rely on and find comfort in this mantra, which has proven to be true.
A huge shout-out to Mr. Bedard with his short and sweet story last week about sending his Mom letters. What an encouraging and inspiring story that every reader should be motivated by. I'll bet quite a few cards and letters went out this week thanks to this kind and caring son. Thank you for sharing!
It is interesting to watch protests, hear testimonies and see individual behaviors during this time. I am becoming more and more disturbed by political obstruction in all of its forms. This is just not the place or the time for such nonsense. Photo ops, late night show appearances...seriously? Not to mention, the ratings are so bad at that hour because many of us are sleeping! Why are these politicians on recess (!) spending time there and not in their own districts? They Serve Us...and from what I am seeing, many have forgotten that. Not serving themselves should go without saying. I would encourage any readers to not forget who, of our elected leaders and citizens who made

lessons learned from a great actor

To the Editor:
When Brian Dennehy died last week, we lost a good neighbor: an accomplished man who was a member of our little community in northeastern Connecticut.
He will be remembered as a great actor who was seen on screens and stages throughout the world for over four decades. He will be praised for his renowned performances of some of the greatest roles in the English language, and also for the tough guys he played in the movies. He will be recognized for many accolades and many awards.
But my memories of Brian will be the qualities he showed me on a personal level. He was helpful, gracious, and kind.
Brian's son and my daughter were in the same class at Pomfret School and when he heard that our chorus was struggling to raise the funds to travel to Bolivia, he stepped up and organized a benefit performance. When I told him that I was travelling to the Stratford

Shakespeare Festival for a professional development project, he arranged all the tickets for me. After attending a performance of "The Crucible" that I was in at the Bradley Playhouse, he wrote me a personal note. After we missed each other following a production of "Waiting for Godot," he left a message on my cell phone to apologize. One very late evening in New York, after a grueling performance in "The Iceman Cometh," Brian set aside time to meet with me in his dressing room. "Thanks for coming," he said.
Helpful. Gracious. Kind. These are qualities of a good neighbor. These are the lessons I learned from Brian; lessons that seem more important than ever. Lessons that may not have a lot to do with acting, but have everything to do with living.

Unemployed? Here’s how to keep your head above water

COVID-19 has presented many challenges since we have all begun to social-distance, work from home, and limit our travel outside of the house. But one of the most leveling aspects has been the dramatic increase in unemployment. More than 22 million Americans have filed for unemployment benefits as businesses are forced to close because of public health orders or cut costs through layoffs and furloughs. This may leave people wondering what resources are available to put food on the table, keep the roof over their head, and manage other financial obligations. Here's everything you need to know if you have lost your job or been furloughed because of the spread of COVID-19.

What should I do if I’ve been laid off or furloughed?

The first thing you should do is apply for unemployment benefits. The goal of unemployment benefits is to replace a percentage of the income you were making at your previous job – in Connecticut, the max you can receive is $649 per week. The next thing you should do is assess your budget and your finances. Is your income enough to cover your bills and other monthly expenses? Do you have enough saved up to get you through this until you can go back to work? Are there monthly expenses or subscriptions where you can cut back?

Finally, consider applying for another job if you or someone in your home is not severely at risk for COVID-19. Even though businesses in your field may not be hiring, others are hiring lots of essential employees to help with the recent demand for certain products. Consider the time frame from when you apply, interview, and ultimately start, as it may be prolonged. For employment placement resources in Connecticut, visit www.CThires.com.

Am I eligible for unemployment assistance?

There are three provisions under the CARES Act that expand benefits and eligibility for those affected by COVID-19: the Federal Pandemic Unemployment Compensation (FPUC), Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA), and the Pandemic Emergency Unemployment Compensation (PEUC).

The FPUC provides an additional $600 to your state's weekly unemployment benefit. This a flat supplement that comes solely from federal funding. For Connecticut residents, the additional $600 will begin the week of April 27 and end July 25.

The PUA expands eligibility for unemployment to those who typically do not qualify: independent contractors, part-time workers, and those who do not have sufficient work history. Individuals must first be denied eligibility or exhaust entitlement to regular unemployment benefits or any state or federal extended benefits before they can be found eligible for PUA benefits. Eligible individuals will receive the $600 FPUC benefits, though this income is taxable. In Connecticut, this program is available until Dec. 26.

The PEUC adds 13 weeks to the standard 26 weeks of unemployment benefits, so you can ultimately receive 39 weeks of assistance should it be needed.

The filing process may take longer than normal as more than 22 million Americans have filed for unemployment in the past month. You can make an unemployment claim online, over the phone, or in-person – though we don’t recommend going in person if you can avoid it. For more information, visit www.dol.gov or if you are a Connecticut resident, go to <http://www.ctdol.state.ct.us/>.

Is there more help coming?

As many people know, the CARES Act provides a one-time relief payment, which starts at $1,200. Depending on your income and the make-up of your household, you may receive more or less. Some people may have already received their check through direct deposit, but if you do not have your banking information filed with the IRS, a check will be mailed to your house.

If you are in need of food assistance, the federal government boosted the amount of money for recipients of the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, or SNAP. Many school districts are also providing meals for children and families that parents can pick up and take home. Our website has local assistance programs listed for those who may need them. www.whzwealth.com/covid19-resources

What happens to my health insurance?

If you have been laid off, you may qualify for COBRA, where you can keep your employer's plan for up to three years. To be eligible for COBRA coverage, you must have been enrolled in your employer's health plan when you worked, and the health plan must continue to be in effect for active employees. There is a 60-day application window from the time you lost your job, so it is better to act sooner rather than later.

If you are furloughed, you may be able to keep your employer-sponsored plan. To pay for your employer-sponsored plan during a furlough, some employers take larger deductions before and after the time off, while others request payment on a pre-set schedule – ask your employer how to handle this situation. Depending on the status of your health coverage from your employer, you may qualify for a Special Enrollment Period. You may also be eligible for a premium tax credit to help pay for Marketplace covered the epidemiology of the Aids virus. He is diligently working towards a cure. In this time of nothing to do, look him up. Convalescent plasma is being researched for a cure. Lieutenant General Semonite, US Army, corps of Engineers working with FEMA to get field hospitals erected in places of need. His men and women, converting the Javits Center in a phenomenal seven days with central piping for O2 and access for ventilators, accessing 646 much needed beds. With the right intel provided by our governors, he will do this continuously for probably the next few months. Hospitals, schools, town halls, hotels and senior centers are site adapting. Retired Medical personnel and first responders are turning out in droves to help and to replace those that have been on the front lines for months now. This is America, this is the human race. In spite of ourselves we come together in time of need.

There are unprecedented by-pardons bills being passed. Unemployment compensation being extended to self-employed folks. I got a letter from my 1199 health care organization which stated that those of us receiving a pension, formally only being allowed to work 40 hours per month, could work as many hours as we wanted to and still receive our pension. Open enrollment for insurance deadlines have been extended. Tax deadlines have been extended. Licensures have been extended. We will see how this all works out but it is a beginning.

We are so lucky in this area to have the news reporting we have. Our town newspapers, where we can express our feelings, get local news along with world news. Winy Radio keeps us up-to-date on a daily basis with familiar voices and guests that help us understand our new environment. The media in our area give uplifting stories, trying to ease the stress that we feel daily. This can only be done if folks are actually doing compassionate uplifting things. I have to thank these news venues for their ability to give a small sense of normality to our daily non-routine lives.

Like all first responders, my nursing profession comes with the realization that at any point in time you will have to be a fearless person to do your job. We get a lot of praise for that and it comes with a sense of civic duty. It doesn't mean that we are fearless. It just means we do our job. There are folks out there now who have been thrown in front line positions that they never expected to be in. We are trained in this, they are not. We are warned about this; they are not. We are educated about how to handle a situation like this; they are not. We have practice drills that help us to negotiate our way through what could be unfamiliar territory; they do not. We are provided equipment and supplies to deal with whatever comes our way (for the first month anyway); they are not. The companies we work for pay folks to come up with plans to negotiate our way through emergency. How fortunate are we? So, to all the grocery workers, delivery personnel, local take-out restaurant employees, food banks and kitchens, truckers, educators and students, moms and dads who have to leave their children to provide these services, everyone who are just staying put and to the dear children, y'all are doing a great job. You are the heroes in my book.

Maybe this will show, once again, our leaders, what Americans are made of-what is rooted deeply in our makeup. A fundamental respect forward towards each other, with a dash of compassion. When this is done, wouldn't it be great to continue to work together. We need to apply another great Philosopher's words (not my relative)... “Imagine”. John Lennon

Please consider giving blood if you can- save a live, be a hero.

I'm happy to be home
