Story of local Holocaust survivor coming to film

BY ERIN PLUMMER

mnews@salmonpress.news

CONCORD — The story of a local woman's survival during the Holocaust is now being told on film. A new film called "Hidden" tells the story of how Kati Preston was hidden from soldiers in a barn as a little girl: a film created by her son and meant to be shared with students across the country.

"Hidden" formally premiered at Red River Theatres in Concord on Nov. 23 in front of a group of friends, family, and educators from across the state. Preston, who is now 85 and lives in Barnstead, was the guest of honor.

The film is a documentary featuring performers reenacting scenes from Preston's life and telling the story of her survival. The performances are book-ended by historical information on the Holocaust in Hungary and how the country has denied much of its past.

The film was directed by Preston's son Daniel Matmor, and features interviews with Preston as well as historians and others who survived the events of open house for a proposed new Public Works facility at the current DPW building on Thursday, Dec. 5, from 6-8 p.m. and on Saturday, Dec. 14, from 9-11 a.m.

Visitors can learn about the conceptual design for the new facility, which will be included on the 2025 town warrant.

"This is a great opportunity to ask questions, view plans, and understand how this important project will benefit the community," read the notice for the event. "Whether you're a resident, business owner, or just someone interested in the project, your input and participation are invaluable."

Members of the Building Needs Committee have been working for the past three years to determine the best options for Public Works' facilities. A report from the committee said the current building, that was constructed in the 1970s, has numerous structural and maintenance issues and recommended replacing it with a new facility.

Studies have found water has infiltrated through the roof and foundation. There are rotted structural elements in and outside the building as well as reoccurring mold throughout the building. The building settles and shifts, which leads to issues with the floors and windows. The pipes burst and cause flooding.

The building's air quality is bad, and the HVAC systems are also failing. There is poor air

How some popular holiday traditions got their start

Will you be baking gingerbread or hanging stockings by the fireplace this holiday season? Perhaps you'll be lighting the menorah or playing a game of dreidel? The holidays are steeped in tradition, some of which are older than celebrants may realize.

Individuals gather during the holidays and participate in various traditions that have withstood the test of time. Most people engage in these traditions or recognize symbols automatically, but it can be interesting to learn how these traditions came to be.

Christmas caroling

The British traditions of wassailing and mumming and the Slavic tradition of koliada were some of the precursors to more modern caroling. People would go door-to-door and recite poetry or sing with the hope of bringing about good fortune or influencing a future harvest, according to Rutgers University. Carolers spread hope and good tidings through song during a time of year when sunlight was limited.

Christmas trees

Pagans once displayed evergreen branches as a reminder that spring would come again, while Romans placed them around temples to honor Saturn, the god of agriculture. Eventually the evergreen was used in conjunction with Christian Christmas celebrations. In the sixteenth century, German Christians put trees inside their homes as symbols of everlasting life.

Santa Claus

Children who celebrate Christmas eagerly await the arrival of a jolly sort who goes by the name of Santa Claus. His origin story stretches back to the third century, when Saint Nicholas became the patron saint of children. Saint Nicholas was a monk in what is modern-day Turkey. It is said that he traveled helping the poor and the sick. History.com says he is believed to have saved three impoverished sisters from slavery by providing them with a dowry so they could be married, and he also provided gifts to children.

Menorah

The menorah is a multi-branched candelabra used in Jewish religious rituals. The menorah is first mentioned in the book of Exodus when the design of the lamp was revealed to Moses by God on Mount Sinai. Many menorahs are seven-branched, but during Chanukah, an eight-branched menorah is used. The Chanukah menorah is modeled after the Tabernacle menorah that corresponds to the eight-day festival. It was used to celebrate the rededication of the Second Temple. The available oil supply was supposed to light the menorah for just one day, but the candles actually burned for eight.

Mistletoe

Kissing under the mistletoe is a holiday season tradition that can lead to some red faces when couples are caught beneath the plant. Norse mythology paved the way for kissing under the mistletoe. Legend has it the gods used mistletoe to resurrect Odin's son, Baldur, from the dead. Baldur's mother, Frigg, the goddess of love, made the plant a symbol of love and vowed to kiss anyone who passed under it. Mistletoe blooms under cold conditions, which is how it became associated with the holiday season.

Yule log

Yule logs were once part of winter solstice celebrations to bring good luck and fortune, but America is where a yule log really caught on as a holiday tradition. In 1966, the WPIX television station in New York City aired a continuous loop of a fireplace burning for three hours with holiday songs playing. It became an annual tradition, says History.com. Some people even serve a cake that looks like a yule log. The Bûche de Noël is a traditional Christmas cake that is especially popular in France.

Holiday traditions continue in full force. Traditions are an endearing component of celebrations and help to unite people from all backgrounds during this special time of year.

Finding your holiday spirit

It happens every year. November fades into December, and suddenly, the world expects you to transform into a holiday fanatic overnight. The lights go up, the carols start playing, and every ad you see insists it's "the most wonderful time of the year." But what if you're just not feeling it yet? Or, worse, you're feeling the pressure to feel it?

Here's a little secret: the holiday spirit isn't something you have to force. It sneaks up on you when you least expect it—like when you hear a kid giggling in a Santa hat, or when the smell of cookies baking fills the house. It's in those little moments, not in the perfectly decorated tree or the over-the-top gift list.

So, how do you find it? Start small. Pour yourself a mug of hot cocoa (marshmallows optional but highly recommended) and sit by the window for five minutes. Listen to your favorite holiday song—the silly ones count too. Drive around to check out the lights in your neighborhood. You don't have to deck the halls in a single day; sometimes, just hanging one strand of twinkle lights can do the trick.

And if the holidays feel like more of a chore this year, that's okay too. Give yourself permission to celebrate in your own way. Skip the big party if it stresses you out and invite a few close friends for a movie night instead. Or spend a quiet evening wrapping gifts (even if they're just for yourself). It's about finding joy where you are, not where you think you're supposed to be.

Remember, holiday spirit isn't one-size-fits-all. It's not about how much you spend or how perfectly you decorate; it's about making the season your own. So whether you're going full Buddy the Elf or keeping it low-key, let the magic find you. It always does.

For a good 'Claus'

Santa made an early appearance at the New Durham Holiday Craft Fair, in support of the New Durham School's sixth grade fundraiser. The class is raising money to attend Ecology School in Maine, and Santa volunteered to pose for pictures to bring in some donations. The craft fair, sponsored by the Parks and Recreation Department, is a popular town event that kicks off the holiday season.

LETTERS FROM EDWIN

Waiting

I've been watching the sun going down a lot lately. Hanging out in the woods with the wild life is pretty peaceful. Looking sunward as it fingers its way toward the horizon through a barrier of trees and branches. Each finger is about fifteen minutes. Slowly turning my gaze around my field of view, I catch its reflection off of distant windows or local tall tree tops until it is no more.

Life is such a waiting game. Waiting to walk. Waiting to grow up. Waiting to meet someone that fits. Hunting is like that. Fishing used to be, but fish finder gadgets kind of take the randomness of encounters out of that equation. If I had a drone with a camera that could fly above my area and spot out my objectives, I could say the same for hunting. But I don't, although I'm sure many others have taken the opportunity to do just that. Technology advances.

Animals used to have a fighting chance. Rocks worked alright, but spears were better. Guns improved on rocks, and arrows upgraded the spears. I was taught that you needed to let a bird alight before shooting at it. Giving it some kind of chance to avoid getting hit with the expanding cloud of bird shot. I was at my sons house the other day and we watched a video of a sportsman's guide showing how he hunted grouse. He shot one on the ground and one from a tree. It appears that they've relaxed their standards once again.

Have you ever watched sports TV? The live stuff is pretty realistic, but since many sports contain so much waiting time, the presentations need to be highly edited and give a totally distorted representation of the action. Fisherman catching one after the other. Hunters getting multiple kills in a half hour. Golfers all intermixed into continual drives and putts. Life should be so choreographed. Yes?

That would be life according to Sesame Street. All too much fast action. That kind of stuff has lead to short attention spans and expecting everything to be quick. Gone are the days of listening to record albums as a single conceptual piece. It's no longer, put a pile of records on the record changer time, it's random access songs where half way through, having had enough, you can just hit the next key. There's always something else next in line.

Life is not just a sequence of soundbites. There is all too much context surrounding everything for it to be so consolidated. The same goes for our news that has become limited into tiny bits of partial information. So too, texting devices have truncated our interpersonal communications. It may be terribly convenient, but it can be totally misleading. One quick conversation can transfer much more information than a string of texts, be much easier, and less likely to be misinterpreted.

After all things are played out, it's all pretty much a waiting game. When you finally figure something out, it's probably too late to make much difference. Those who can get ahead of the curve find success. How can one increase one's chances? Sitting and waiting for something to happen isn't terribly effective. Fish finders and drones may improve results.

All my life I wasn't

Padre Pio

POSITIVELY
TOBY MOORE

In the small Italian village of Pietrelcina, on May 25, 1887, Francesco Forgione was born into a humble family of farmers. No one could have predicted that this boy, who would later take the name Padre Pio, would become one of the most enigmatic and revered figures in modern Catholicism.

Padre Pio's journey to the priesthood began early. As a child, he claimed to have mystical experiences, including visions of Jesus and Mary. At 15, he entered the Capuchin Order, and by 23, he was ordained a priest. But it wasn't his sermons or pastoral care that would make him famous—it was the miraculous and inexplicable phenomena that surrounded him.

Perhaps the most famous aspect of Padre Pio's life was his stigmata—wounds resembling those of Christ on the cross. In 1918, while praying, Padre Pio reportedly received these marks, which he bore for 50 years until his death.

The stigmata were examined multiple times by medical professionals, with opinions ranging from supernatural to psychological or physical causes. The Vatican conducted thorough investigations into these claims over decades, reflecting both skepticism and respect.

Ultimately, the Church ruled the stigmata as genuine and beyond natural explanation, contributing to his canonization in 2002.

His mystical gifts didn't stop there. Padre Pio was said to possess the ability to bilocate—appearing in two places at once—and to read souls, revealing private details during confessions that penitents hadn't disclosed.

These accounts, while widely believed by his devotees, are based on anecdotal evidence and lack independent verification, leading skeptics to question their authenticity. Padre Pio humbly attributed all his gifts to God, famously saying, "I only want to be a poor friar who prays."

For all the awe he inspired, skepticism followed him, too. Was the stigmata self-inflicted? Were the stories exaggerated by adoring followers?

In the 1920s, the Church temporarily restricted Padre Pio's public ministry, citing concerns about the authenticity of his wounds and the intensity of his following. These questions persist but don't diminish the enduring allure of his legacy.

Of all the mysteries tied to Padre Pio, none are as dramatic—or as spine-tingling—as the stories from World War II. San Giovanni Rotondo, where Padre Pio lived, was under threat from Allied bombing campaigns. Intelligence reports indicated German munitions near the town, making it a likely target.

But according to eyewitness accounts, strange things happened whenever Allied planes flew near the area. Pilots reported seeing a figure in the sky—a monk with outstretched arms—forcing them to veer off course.

Bombs either dropped harmlessly into nearby fields, or missions were abandoned altogether due to unexplained mechanical failures. These stories, while captivating, lack corroboration in wartime records and are primarily based on post-war testimonies.

One American pilot, shaken by what he described as a vision of a monk in the air, visited San Giovanni Rotondo after the war. When he saw Padre Pio, he recognized him immediately as the figure who had appeared before his plane.

This account and others like it were popularized by author Frank Rega in "Padre Pio and America."

While these stories border on the unbelievable, they come from multiple sources. Even skeptics wonder: How was the town spared when so many others weren't? Could these be tales of coincidence and wartime imagination, or were they miraculous interventions? Stories like these invite both awe and doubt. How much of what we hear is faith-driven embellishment, and how much points to something beyond human understanding?

He once remarked: "In books we seek God; in prayer we find him..."

Perhaps it is that unwavering belief in prayer and divine intervention that makes stories of Padre Pio so compelling.

Whether or not Padre Pio truly appeared as a "flying monk" to Allied pilots, the fact remains: his life continues to captivate millions.

As we consider these extraordinary tales, we don't have to decide whether they are fact or fiction. Instead, we can marvel at their ability to inspire and remind us of the mysteries that surround the human experience.

During our time of division and uncertainty, perhaps the most valuable takeaway from Padre Pio's life is his simple yet profound message: "Pray, hope, and don't worry."

Author Ty Gagne to return to Country Bookseller

WOLFEBORO — Ty Gagne will be returning to Wolfeboro for a signing at The Country Bookseller Thursday, Dec. 19 from 3 to 5 p.m.

Gagne, author of "Where You'll Find Me" and "The Last Traverse," has published a new book, "The Lions of Winter: Survival and Sacrifice on Mount Washington."

In this tale of tragedy and survival, Gagne explores the four-day search for two missing ice climbers on

New Hampshire's Mount Washington in extreme weather conditions in 1982. That fateful search led to the death of Albert Dow, a member of the all-volunteer Mountain Rescue Service. He was caught in an avalanche in terrain previously thought to present no risk. Dow was a Tuftonboro native and his humanitarian heroism lives on both in the memory of his life and circumstances of his death.

In "The Lions of Winter," Gagne describes the ordeal of the missing climbers, the selflessness and courage of the dedicated rescuers, the tragic circumstances surrounding the avalanche, and the heartbreak of the family, friends, and teammates of the fallen rescuer. Gagne also chronicles how this grueling event became a landmark of White Mountain history, ushering in a new era in the search and rescue community of New Hampshire.

Ty Gagne is chief executive officer of New Hampshire Public Risk Management Exchange (Primex³), a public entity risk pool serving local governments in New Hampshire. He is a certified Wilderness First Responder and in addition to his two previous books, his work has also been published in the Appalachia Journal. He credits his experiences in the White Mountains and his love of mountaineering literature for providing important lessons about decision-making, leadership, risk-taking, and humility.

For more information or to reserve copies of any of Ty's books, please call The Country Bookseller at (603) 569-6030.

BUILDING

(continued from Page A1) exchange and ventilation in the garage area and exposure to dust and shop fumes on all floors. The air conditioner and heating systems are also failing. There are also pest infestations and a shared kitchen and bathroom sinks that are unsanitary.

The report also showed the current facilities are inadequate for the department's needs. There is no centralized storage in the building and storage is scattered into overflow workspaces and other town buildings. The garage bays are narrow and too small for accommodating larger equipment as well as vehicles such as fire engines and plow trucks. There is no covered storage for winter equipment. The building also has lack of office space and no proper kitchen space for staff.

Additional concerns include infiltration from the water table into the building and vehicle lifts as well as inadequate site drainage by the nearby brook. The building doesn't have reliable backup power or staging space for emergency winter response. There is also a lack of ADA accessibility in the building.

Since the building was built in the 1970's the DPW has taken on much more responsibility. In the past 50 years the population of the town has gone from 3,219 people to 7,699. The DPW went from a staff of seven people with 20 vehicles to a staff of 32 with 84 vehicles. Originally, the department maintained 50 miles of roads, and they are now responsible for 90 miles as well as over 1,000 drainage crossings and 570 structures, 19 miles of sewer main, three pump stations, and 650 sewer structures.

Banwell Architects of Lebanon came up with a rendering of a proposed facility. Construction manager Bonnette, Page, and Stone of Laconia is currently reviewing a 50 percent plan design and developing cost estimates. A more complete design and costs are anticipated to be ready by mid December for a more accurate amount on the town warrant. Currently the town is estimating that the project will cost around $12 million with a 30 year bond.

More information on the proposed DPW building project can be found on a special section of the town Web site at <https://www.gilfordnh.org/entity/DPW-Building-Needs-Committee-36>.

Holiday family concert in Barnstead Saturday

BARNSTEAD — It's getting cold and there is frost on the pumpkins, so it must be time for Maine music luminaries Joyce Andersen & Harvey Reid to return to Barnstead and share their Christmas music with us. This is the 24th year that they have presented their unique Christmas show to New England communities. Their concert for us last year was a great success and we invite you to make it a family tradition. Join us at the Congregational Church of North Barnstead (504 North Barnstead Rd.) on Saturday, Dec. 7 at 4 p.m. The suggested donation is $15 or $25 for the family. Joyce Andersen and Harvey Reid have been making music professionally for their entire lives; both toured extensively across the country and abroad, earning a long list of awards and recognition for their distinctive and deeply-rooted Americana music. They play folk, country, bluegrass, blues, Celtic and even some classical music. They will ride their musical sleigh effortlessly across genres and centuries, from banjos to blues to Beethoven, from elves to Elvis, from wise men and camels to Willie Nelson and reindeer. It will be a great way to start the Christmas season.

much into the money thing. I could certainly use a little extra now. But actually, I'm doing pretty well, I have everything that I need, and then some. Having spent so much of my lifetime accumulating an incredible amount of stuff, I find that I'm now trying to unload some that no longer contributes significantly to my lifestyle. It's humbling to see how it's really not worth very much.

Pretty much the only wildlife I have seen out in the woods these past few days has been squirrels. They're omnipresent. I did hear some woodpeckers. Standing still for hours, as in doing Tai Chi, rotating myself as slowly as possible, searching deeply into the woods for some sign of motion, some flicker of life. Only on my first day, after it was past time to be heading out of the woods, did I see a deer. As I was considering heading back, way off in the trees I noticed a flicker of white in the diminishing dusk. Too dark to shoot. There were actually two of them. Flashing me their back sides as they slipped out of sight.

the time. Matmor himself is also featured searching for details on the Holocaust in Hungary and exploring his mother's hometown. The showing was followed by a discussion on the film with the filmmakers.

Matmor said the dramatizations were filmed in Canada with Canadian actors. All the performers speak their lines in Hungarian with English subtitles and the performers were coached in Hungarian. Matmor these parts couldn't be filmed in Hungary due to the country's current political climate. He said Hungary is now in a period of denial about its history and even speaking about its role in the Holocaust can lead to being arrested.

"It was upsetting when we went to Romania and Hungary because of the complete amnesia," he said.

He said many details of the Holocaust in Hungary are completely unknown by most people.

"We're seeing the re-writing of history," Matmor said. "(We're) fearful we might see rewritten history soon."

Members of the cast attended the premiere, including young Franky Glover who played Kati as a child.

The movie shows Preston's happy life with her family, a happiness that was gradually snuffed out when Germany invaded Hungary in 1944. Her father was Jewish, and her mother was Catholic, leading to the persecution of her entire family. A milk maid offered to take the then five-year-old and hide her in her barn to repay her mother's kindness in making her a wedding dress. The film illustrates the day she was forced to hide in the hay to avoid being discovered by Hungarian soldiers and how a soldier's bayonet narrowly hit her.

Matmor said it was important to show how his mother had a normal, happy childhood before the Holocaust to emphasize "evil built from normalcy" of how their rights were stripped gradually.

"My mother's experience was of a wonderful childhood," Matmor said.

Kati Preston of Barnstead with Franky Glover, who played her as a child in the movie "Hidden" and Bridget Gillie who plays Elizabeth. "Suddenly, what was a life of education, beauty, and family became a living nightmare."

This illustrates the reality that anyone can experience something like this and how easy it is for rights to be stripped away.

The movie shared how Preston had a lot of hate after she learned her father was murdered in Auschwitz.

"Hidden" also featured a moment where Preston admitted she herself had been brainwashed. In the 1950s under Soviet rule, children in Hungarian schools were encouraged to report loved ones to the authorities if they said or did anything against the government. Preston reported her mother for statements against Stalin, which resulted in her mother having to dig benches for months as punishment. Matmor said he asked his mother if she wanted this included and Preston replied she wanted to share this because it was a moment where she had been brainwashed.

Over years her hate turned around and she aimed to spread love.

"It was a long process; it took a while, but I was very fortunate to run into very kind people," Preston said.

She said she was once told that loving one's enemies is more effective than hating them.

"It was an old man I met (who said) if you're bullied if you become hurt they win, if you're kind to your enemies it kills them," Preston said.

Matmor thanked his mother for her "brutal honesty" during this process, "Growing up with Holocaust survivors all my youth it was a daily thing, in a way it's part of our DNA," Matmor said.

Preston now shares her story by speaking at schools, libraries, and other institutions across the Northeast.

"Life is a gift, please keep spreading the word not to hate anybody," Preston said.

ERIN PLUMMER

Preston speaks with Gov. Chris Sununu before the premiere of "Hidden."

She was also instrumental in the formation and passage of SB 727 that requires education on the Holocaust and genocide in schools starting in eighth grade and as a requirement for graduation.

One person who has frequently worked with Preston and pushed the legislation forward is Gov. Chris Sununu, who was a guest at the premiere. Sununu said he has seen Preston talk to many schools and seen the impact she has on kids. She also asked to visit people in prison with the goal of meeting those who hate her.

Her congratulated Preston and the filmmakers for this achievement.

"Movies are hard to make," he said. "To be here and actually have this thing opening is amazing. On behalf of the state of New Hampshire we're proud of our gem Kati."

Sununu said there are many more stories like hers. He said it is one thing to have the strength to go through that experience, but the strength to share it is amazing.

"This is the type of thing you want to go viral," Sununu said. "There's no question that this is the type of story that keeps moving us forward."

Tom White, Coordinator for Educational Outreach for the Cohen Center for Holocaust and Genocide Studies at Keene State College, appeared in the film sharing history from the time. After the film he said Preston has presented her story not as a victim but a survivor. He said that many people use victimization as a "badge of honor" and weaponize it against their enemies.

"I think Kati would reject that title. She's a survivor," White said.

Speakers talked about how vital a film like this is to educate people about the Holocaust, especially with a rise in hateful rhetoric and acts against different groups of people.

The filmmakers aim to distribute the film to schools across the country to share this history.

"We have a very ambitious program," Matmor said. "We want to bring it into thousands of schools especially schools that cannot afford it."

Producer Jody Glover said they are working with a company to distribute the film and books to K-12 schools across the country.

Matmor said they will start fundraising for schools that can't afford to buy the film, saying those are the schools that really need to hear this story.

Later during the event one teacher in the audience talked about how difficult it is to teach many historical subjects with many people pushing back and insisting on teaching "both sides."

Preston said the only way to teach about this subject is to be honest about history.

"Please don't give up your courage teachers, because we all need you," she said.

White said it is especially important to educate kids in economically disadvantaged areas who might be more susceptible to hate and less likely to learn about topics like the Holocaust. He recalled a Zoom conversation with a group of students where one student expressed support of a hate group. He asked about that student's perspective, and they had a conversation about frustrations and personal difficulties that led the student to pro-hate messages on social media.

"We got to a point where he said, 'I was wrong, I'm going to take this off my Facebook profile,'" White said. "The conversation I had with him was if you listen to the answer you're going to find out we have a lot more in common than we have different."

Locals compete in Wolfeboro's annual Turkey Trot

BY JOSHUA SPAULDING

WOLFEBORO — Some much-needed early morning rain and blustery winds didn't keep close to 200 runners from descending on downtown Wolfeboro on Saturday morning for the annual Gift of Sight and Hearing Turkey Trot.

Put on by the Wolfeboro Lions Club and the Wolfeboro Department of Parks and Recreation, the annual race, which is held on the Saturday before Thanksgiving every year, raises money for the Lions Club's charities and many club members were on hand to help guide racers around the course, serve up hot soup after the race and run the raffle that took place concurrently to the race.

Runners started at the Wolfeboro Railroad Station and made their way along the Bridge Falls Path to Center Street, where they turned left and made their way up Route 109A to Filter Bed Road, where they turned left. After a jaunt through the woods, they emerged out to Mill Street and followed that road along to North Main Street, where they turned left and headed back to the railroad station and the finish line.

Wolfeboro's Seth Richardson was the overall winner, crossing in a time of 17:00, with WATERVILLE VALLEY — Waterville Valley Resort once again finds itself back in the center of the Snowsports Universe. In the last few weeks of November when most of the ski areas in New England were struggling to get open, Waterville Valley was playing host to ski and snowboarding teams from around the world. The resort has been committed over the last several seasons to opening High Country on the summit of Mount Tecumseh for moguls, snowboarding, Big Air and ski racers.

"This is the thing that makes us stand out, no other training facility has all these mixed together. Seeing all sides of the sport working together to make this a reality is what it's all about," stated General Manager Tim Smith.

Teams have come from Canada, Slovenia, Croatia, Italy, Switzerland, Finland, and Australia. The US Ski and Snowboard teams have also been there including the boardercross, ski cross, freestyle, para, and alpine squads. It has been a who's who of World Cup Stars around the Waterville Valley and none bigger than USA's Mikaela Shiffrin, fresh off the 99th win of her career in Gurgl, Austria.

"She is the GOAT and to have a part in her story is truly special and a great honor," exclaimed Smith.

There is no other training center in New England or anywhere in America dedicated to having all disciplines of snowsports training side by side in one defined location, especially for early season training.

David Lorrey, Director of Recruitment and longtime coach for Waterville Valley Academy commented, "The positive feedback from the athletes and coaches made me realize how valuable the training site on High Country is. We have low temps at elevation for snowmaking, fast turnaround with the T-bar lift, the slope is a perfect pitch, there is a warming hut nearby, and the whole site is isolated from the public. That is what makes this a one of kind location."

And it just wasn't competitors flocking to Waterville Valley Resort, manufacturers such as Prinoth, the leading company that makes grooming machines brought in their newest model, the Bison X along with legendary operator, jump designer and builder Charles Beckinsale from Austria. He is highly sought after and travels the world with the biggest freestyle athletes and brands in the industry. Beckinsale constructed the Big Air jump on High Country standing more than 65 feet in height.

Corey Potter, the cameraman for the Prinoth promotional video explained, "It's amazing to see so much snow up here and all the different activities, world class racers, a snowboard cross, moguls and this monster 65-foot jump in the middle of it all. I've never seen anything like it."

Waterville Valley Resort is rooted in world class athletes and its founder, Olympian Tom Corcoran, created a resort with this in mind. Not only is Waterville Valley the birthplace of freestyle skiing, holding the first contest in 1969, but it has also hosted 11 World Cup ski races and has long been recognized on the world stage as a hot bed for coaching, athletes and events. The resort also paved the path for both moguls and snowboarding to become Olympic disciplines.

Rob Dresser, head mogul coach at Waterville Valley Academy, explains, "For the student athletes, it's important to be able to go to class then get on the slope and then sleep in their own bed is amazing. It allows us to focus on school, training and fitness. The early opening has led to being able to develop skills and work on fundamentals."

son training and competitions, they were recently in Hintertux, Austria for the start of the FIS season.

Dresser sums up the training experience, "When we leave here for glacier in Europe, in late October it's sunny, warm and leaves are on the trees. Then we get back and Waterville in November and its straight to snow for training. Our student athletes don't miss a beat."

Lorrey expands on that idea, "I have coached thousands of athletes from seven-year-olds up to FIS athletes. To see Waterville create this venue and commit to elevating it to a world class level and then watching Mikaela, the greatest ski racer who ever walked the planet, slice that hill like she did, it shows a ski coach like me what is possible and creates new goals."

It is a long history of creating and hosting world class athletes, training and hosting event that sees no end in sight with the world returning to Waterville Valley for the World Cup Moguls Jan. 24 and 25. Held on the historic Lower Bobby's Run, the event will feature men's and women's moguls as well as men's and women's duals. New this season will feature an event village at the base of the run for spectators.

Smith is proud of the resort's commitment to world class training and event. He explains, "When our ownership purchased the resort in 2010, they made it clear that they wanted to carry the legacy forward.

It's in our DNA, and this creates lasting memories. One of those may be early season training next to Mikaela or forerunning the moguls at the World Cup. The magical moments that are created by having these world class athletes here at our resort are truly things families will talk about for generations."
