Woodstock intersection to see traffic signal upgrades

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

WOODSTOCK — An intersection in Woodstock is among ten in Eastern Connecticut included in a traffic control signal replacement project through the Connecticut Department of Transportation.

The DOT held a virtual public informational presentation and question and answer session on Feb. 3 where they provided details of the expected upgrades including one signal in Woodstock at the intersection of Routes 169 and 171, and Stonebridge Road. The entire project, which includes 13 different signals throughout the eastern part of the state, is fully state funded and will cost a combined $16.7 million.

Kaethe Podgorski, Project Manager for the replacement initiative, explained that the replacements are part of the DOT's larger goal of keeping all its traffic signals up to date with new technology and infrastructure.

"We have a goal to keep (the traffic signals) working in a state of good repair. We have a lot of data on our existing traffic signal equipment and structures and we're able to do an assessment as to whether each traffic signal is good, fair,

Thompson Public Schools partner with state, EWIB to develop early childhood & CDA career pathway

THOMPSON — Students at Tourtellotte Memorial High School (TMHS) now have an exciting new opportunity to begin their journey toward a rewarding career in early childhood education. Thompson Public Schools, in partnership with CT State Community College Quinebaug Valley and the Eastern Workforce Investment Board (EWIB), has launched a new Early Childhood Education (ECE) Pathway. This addition brings the total number of career pathways at TMHS to 14, with two more currently in development.

Students enrolled in the ECE Pathway will complete two college-level early childhood courses offered through CT State: Introduction to Early Childhood Care and Education (EDED 1001) and Foundations of Child Development (EDED 1002). These courses are offered as dual enrollment, allowing students to earn both high school and college credit. Each course carries three college credits, giving students a strong academic head start.

In addition to coursework, students will work toward earning a nationally recognized Child Development Associate (CDA) credential. This process includes completing 480 clinical hours, developing a professional portfolio, and passing a comprehensive exam—providing students with hands-on experience and industry-valued certification before graduation.

Through close collaboration with CT State—and with the support of Dr. R. Mac Griswold and curriculum guidance from Rosalie Witt, Interim Early Childhood Program Coordinator—the district was able to think creatively to staff the dual enrollment courses. Thompson Public Schools identified an exceptional internal candidate: Tara Brissette, a preschool teacher at Mary R. Fisher

Quiet Corner Garden Club sponsors tree planting project

WOODSTOCK — The Quiet Corner Garden Club (QCGC), with a grant from National Garden Club's Plant America program, is sponsoring a tree planting project in honor of the nation's 250th anniversary.

The Club is prepared to plant a tree in the fourteen towns in Connecticut and two in Massachusetts, representative of the Garden Club's membership. Nine of the fourteen towns have already committed to the project. Trees planted in Connecticut will be the White oak, the state tree. In Massachusetts, it will be the state tree, the American elm. Each town will choose the location to plant. Funds raised in part by the QCGC's annual Plant Sale and the $2,000 grant from Plant America will be used to purchase the trees.

QCGC is recruiting local scout groups, 4H clubs and others to assist Club members in planting the trees in the spring. Involving youth groups encourages interest in gardening, horticulture and the conservation of natural resources, all part of QCGC's mission.

White oak trees and American elms have a historic resonance in their respective states. The White oak was named state tree to honor the Charter Oak, a majestic white oak that grew at the state capital. In 1687, Colonists hid Connecticut's Royal Charter in the Oak to prevent its confiscation by British authorities. In 1856, a violent storm felled the Charter Oak estimated to be 500 to 600 years old. Native Americans used bent oak saplings, which are extremely pliable, to mark trails. Because white oaks flourish in many different eco-regions, they are considered well suited to withstand anticipated climate changes.

American elms, due to their distinctive vase-shaped arching form, were traditionally used by Native Americans as "council" trees for important meetings. Massachusetts designated the American elm as its state tree in 1941 to commemorate General Washington assuming command of the Continental Army in 1775 under an American elm (which stood until 1923). American elms were used extensively as a street tree in many American towns and cities in the 19th century. The rapid spread of the Dutch elm disease decimated the elm population during the 20th century. Arborists have created varieties in the past few decades that are hoped to be disease-resistant.

Local Eastern students pledge compassionate care at ‘white coat ceremony’

WILLIMANTIC — Nursing majors took their oath of service at Eastern Connecticut State University’s second annual White Coat Ceremony on Jan. 22 in the Fine Arts Instructional Center Concert Hall. The event was held in accordance with the historic Arnold P. Gold Foundation, which was established in 1993 and whose namesake began the tradition of the ceremony.

Among those celebrated at the ceremony were: Sophomore Allison Griswold of Woodstock Junior Jessica Long of Danielson

At the ceremony, nursing students took a professional oath in front of friends, family, clinical partners, and members of the University community. They then received their white coats, which they will again ceremonialize at the nursing pinning ceremony as they conclude their education.

The ceremony marks a young tradition in Eastern’s Bachelor of Science in Nursing (BSN) program, which launched in fall 2024 with a major grant from the Connecticut Health Horizons Project. The program has 122 students among its first three cohorts and expects 75 enrollees in fall 2026.

The ceremony was both a rite of passage for future medical staff and a reminder to prioritize compassion and empathy for their patients above all else. Christina Nadeau, director of Eastern’s nursing program, opened the ceremony with a history lesson on the Arnold P. Gold Foundation and its ties to medical oaths.

“Gold firmly believed that in medical school, the Hippocratic Oath (an ancient promise of ethics in medicine) was taken way too late, and that an oath should be taken at the beginning of the medical process,” said Nadeau. “The goal (of the ceremony) is to infuse humanism and professional identity from the start of the clinical practice education.”

The ceremony’s keynote address was given by Deanna Hill of the Connecticut Children’s Medical Center in Hartford. As the hospital’s manager of professional development, she explained that empathy is by far the most necessary skill in nursing.

“Learning how to manage IV pumps, knowing all of the bones in your body or how to suction a tracheostomy tube aren’t your top priorities. Believe it or not, empathy and the ability to connect with others are the most foundational elements of nursing,” she said. “You will be caring for human beings, and it’s important to remember that there’s a person behind that piece of equipment or that list of tasks.”

Eastern President Karim Ismaili addressed the nursing majors’ achievement, remarking that the ceremony reflected a commitment to professionalism and service.

“As you put on your white coats, you are stepping into a profession that requires both clinical excellence and deep humanity,” said Ismaili. “Nursing is consistently recognized as one of the most trusted professions in our country, and that trust is earned every day through care and empathy.”

Provost Cheryl Wilson added that the white coat is a physical representation of the benevolence that comes with the interpersonal nature of the profession.

“The coat that you received today is more than just a symbol of your commitment to the profession - it’s a testament to the hours you have studied, practiced, reflected, and pushed yourselves to develop the knowledge and character required of those who care for others,” she said. “Nursing is science, but it is also profoundly human work.”

Lamont includes free school breakfast in state budget proposal

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

REGION — Gov. Ned Lamont is renewing his push to provide free school breakfast for all students from kindergarten through 12th grade as part of his state budget proposal which was submitted to the General Assembly on Feb. 4.

The Governor’s office released statements regarding the announcement on Feb. 5 which revealed the new budget contains $12.5 million to allow access to breakfast meals for all 500,000-plus students that attend public schools across the state regardless of income, making the meals completely free. The move would also eliminate reduced-price lunch charges, making those meals free for qualifying students.

The proposal still needs to pass the legislature’s Appropriations Committee to potentially become a part of the spending plan.

“A healthy breakfast provides kids with the opportunity to start the day ready to learn and thrive, and too many of our young people do not have access to this basic life necessity,” Lamont said in a press release. “Breakfast plays a crucial role in kids’ ability to focus and excel in the classroom. Every child, regardless of their family’s income, should be able to start the day with a healthy meal.”

Connecticut Education Commissioner Charlene M. Russell-Tucker agreed with the Governor calling the funding important to help every student start the day with a prepared mind.

“We thank Governor Lamont for proposing an investment that provides free school breakfast to all public school students and eliminates reduced-price lunch charges for roughly 13,000 additional students,” Russell-Tucker said in a statement. “This investment removes both financial barriers and social stigma that can stand in the way of student well-being and ensures every child can begin the school day nourished and ready to learn.”

This is Lamont’s second attempt to provide free meals for students after initially proposing the investment last year.

The move comes at a time when families across the state are concerned with food security and the availability of federal SNAP benefits. The concept behind the Governor’s proposal is to ensure no student gets left behind, helping take the pressure off families to afford a good breakfast to prepare students for their day.

Eastern student Julia Trainor of Putnam explores literary themes in first MLA undergrad research session

WILLIMANTIC — Six English majors at Eastern Connecticut State University made history on Jan. 9, presenting their research at the Modern Language Association (MLA) Annual Convention’s inaugural undergraduate research poster session in Toronto, Canada. Eastern’s group was the largest representation by any institution at the session.

Among the student presenters was senior Julia Trainor of Putnam. Trainor conceived of her project, “Broken Mirrors: Defining the Three Types of Memories in Dystopian Literature,” during an independent study with Speicher. She combined her interest in the dystopian genre with her psychology minor to incorporate memory into her argument.

Trainor’s research was enriched by her attendance at the conference: “During these presentations, I found different sources I could use to support my thesis and different ways to continue my own research,” she said.

The MLA consists of more than 20,000 members in 100 countries and provides programs supporting educators of English and other languages. Speaking to the annual convention’s inaugural undergraduate research session, MLA Executive Director Paula Krebs said:

“Undergraduate research is vital to the future of languages and literature, and it gives students essential opportunities to develop transferable skills, build their intellectual identities, and make learning meaningful. I was so excited to meet the team of students from Eastern, to find out more about their research, and to get their feedback about ways we could further engage undergrads. They are an inspiring bunch!”

“I am incredibly proud of our Eastern

English majors for presenting their research at the MLA convention’s first-ever undergraduate research poster session,” said Emily Todd, dean of arts and sciences and trip supervisor. “The students not only presented their own projects but also filled their convention schedules with sessions relevant to their research and future goals.”

Faculty mentor and English Professor Allison Speicher spoke to the seriousness of the students’ research and the conference’s impact on their identity as scholars: “Being able to write a strong paper or creative work is one skill; being able to translate that work into an informative poster and explain it face-to-face to leading scholars is quite another, and I’m exceptionally proud that our students were bold enough to (literally) stand by their work.”

Small places, steady hands

In Northeast Connecticut, progress rarely announces itself with a ribbon cutting or a press conference. More often, it shows up quietly, in the form of steady hands doing necessary work without much fanfare.

It is the highway crew patching a road before it becomes a bigger problem. The town clerk who knows which form you really need before you ask. The volunteer who unlocks the meeting room, sets out the chairs, and turns off the lights when everyone else has gone home.

These are not glamorous roles, but they are the backbone of small towns like ours.

In larger places, systems are designed to absorb mistakes. Here, relationships do that work. When something goes wrong, it is not an anonymous department that fixes it. It is a neighbor. Sometimes it is the same neighbor who fixed the last problem, too.

That closeness can feel inconvenient at times. Everyone knows everyone. News travels fast. Disagreements do not fade easily. But the same familiarity that fuels tension also creates accountability. When you see the same people at the post office, the school concert, and the grocery store, it is harder to cut corners. Harder to disappear.

That matters, especially now, when many people feel disconnected from institutions that are supposed to serve them. In our towns, government still looks like a person sitting across a folding table, explaining a budget line item in plain language. It looks like a selectman answering emails late at night, or a school board member lingering after a meeting to hear concerns.

This is not nostalgia. It is reality. Small towns survive because people keep showing up. They serve on boards, coach teams, organize food drives, and quietly keep the machinery running. Not because it is easy, but because it matters to them where they live.

That sense of responsibility is something worth protecting. As Northeast Connecticut continues to navigate change, growth, and uncertainty, it is worth remembering that the strength of our communities has never come from grand gestures. It comes from consistency. From people who take their roles seriously, even when no one is watching. Progress here does not shout. It endures.

Opinion and commentary from the Quiet Corner

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pomfret deserves a budget process we can trust

To the Editor:

Pomfret residents work hard and expect their tax dollars to be handled carefully. Recent budget problems, including unaccounted Board of Education funds, show that our current budget process isn't delivering the transparency or accountability taxpayers deserve.

Today, much of the budget is developed out of public view, with residents given only limited opportunities to weigh in. While "citizen comments" are allowed, there is little room for real discussion or explanation. When questions are raised, they are too often dismissed rather than addressed openly. That approach weakens trust and leaves taxpayers feeling shut out.

This matters because the cost of living in Connecticut is already among the highest in the nation. In Pomfret, property taxes have increased by more than 10% per year on average over the past five years. New state mandates could push those costs even higher. Families, seniors, and small businesses all feel the strain.

A better way forward is possible—and practical. Many towns have already done it. Here are a few common-sense, bipartisan steps Pomfret can take:

Open the budget process. Hold fully transparent meetings, offer Zoom access, and record sessions so residents can follow decisions that affect their wallets.

Start budgeting from affordability. Zero-based budgeting requires every expense to be justified rather than automatically adding to last year's spending. It encourages discipline and smarter choices.

Be honest about revenue and costs. Grants may appear to be a gift of free money, but dig a little deeper, and you will discover the intricate value and responsibility they carry! They should be evaluated for long-term costs and used to support clear town priorities, not for short-term or individual projects.

Give residents time to review the budget. Draft budgets should be available well before the Town Meeting, allowing for meaningful questions and informed decisions.

Make voting accessible and fair. When everyone pays taxes, more than a small fraction of voters should have the opportunity to approve the budget—without pressure from town officials.

A transparent, inclusive budget process doesn't just control costs - it builds confidence, encourages participation, and leads to better decisions. Pomfret residents deserve a system that respects their voices and their hard-earned money!

A nation drowning in distraction

To the Editor:

Americans are living in a state of permanent distraction. A public overwhelmed by competing narratives has less capacity to focus on the truth and reality. This Administration's "flooding the zone" playbook purposefully creating chaos to get the public to stop demanding accountability of the rich and powerful men involved in Epstein's intercontinental sex trafficking scandal and cover up.

In other countries, the perpetrators involved with Epstein are losing their jobs but not in America. In America, many of the perpetrators hold jobs in the highest levels of our government where corruption, fraud and constitutional violations against American citizens continues unfettered. The abuse of executive powers, misuse of the military, misuse of taxpayer funds, defying of court orders, and the violation of the Constitution is common practice. Legal scholars outline the protections guaranteed by the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, Tenth and Fourteenth Amendments that are being stripped away: First – the freedom of worship, of speech, and of the press and the right to assembly and to petition the government. Second – the right to bear arms and the importance of a well-regulated militia for the security of a free state. Fourth – the protection of people from unreasonable searches and seizures by the government. Fifth – the right to due process. Tenth – the government only has powers delegated to it by the constitution, all other powers are reserved to the state or to the people. Fourteenth – the guarantee of citizenship and equal rights to all persons born in the United States.

What is the red line for the American people? So far, it's not: the use of massive domestic surveillance on Americans, the killing of American citizens, deporting citizens and legal immigrants, seizing voter records, threatening to nationalize elections (a violation of the Elections Clause of the Constitution which grants states the primary authority to regulate elections), imposing tariffs which are taxes on American consumers, or the posting of white supremacy propaganda. Nor is it the inciting of an insurrection, pardoning criminals, the invasion of Venezuela, the threatening of Panama, Greenland or Iran, boots on the ground in Nigeria, military strikes on boats in the Caribbean, implementing investigations into political opponents and ICE victims, nor the expiration of the nuclear Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty with Russia (as of Feb. 6), which is said to be a 'grave moment' for international peace and security. So, what is our red line?

The world is watching the U.S. in decline. A Former White House Trump attorney, Ty Cobb, recently said Trump is experiencing a "significant decline" in his mental faculties. Many allies are referring to Trump's statements and actions as unheinged. European leaders fear Trump's deal with Putin ignores their security. European governments are quietly debating dumping $2.34 trillion of U.S. treasury bonds. "A coordinated sell-off of this magnitude could shake the American financial system, hammer the value of the U.S. dollar, and trigger a liquidity crisis. Economists warn the impact could be more severe than the 2008 financial crash, potentially sending borrowing costs soaring and freezing large parts of the banking sector."

That would be the ultimate distraction. Millions of Americans struggling to afford basic necessities like food, paying rent, the mortgage, or monthly bills. And viola, Americans are drowning in another distraction and no longer focused on the Epstein files and the thousands of trafficked victims who deserve justice.

Let your representatives know they must uphold our constitutional rights and freedoms and seek justice for Epstein's victims.

Selected quotes

To the Editor:

In this season of intense civil discourse, we all may gain a measure of Insight by contemplating words of wisdom from others. In that spirit, I offer a few selected quotes.

We celebrate the birthday of our 16th president on Feb. 12. As the status and fate of our democratic republic is debated today, Abraham Lincoln's words of Aug. 1, 1858, should be remembered:

"As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is not democracy."

February is Black History month. In his 2001 documentary film "Jazz," Ken Burns asked Wynton Marsalis about the relationship between race and jazz. Here is what Marsalis said:

"Race is like, for this country, is like the thing in the story – in the mythology – that you have to do for the kingdom to be well. And it's always something you don't want to do. And it's always that thing that is so much about you confronting yourself; it is tailor-made for you to fail dealing with it. And the question of your heroism, and of your courage and of your success in dealing with this trial, is can you confront it with honesty, and do you confront it and do you have the energy to sustain an attack on it. And since jazz music is at the center of the American mythology, it necessarily deals with race. The more we run from it, the more we run into it. It's an age-old story. You know, if it's not race, it's something else. But in this particular instance, in this nation, it is race."

Or, as Colin Kaepernick said in speaking to reporters on Sept. 20, 2016:

"There's a lot of racism disguised as patriotism in this country. And people don't like to address that. And they don't like to address what the root of this protest is."

As the author of Ecclesiastes (9:17) says:

"The quiet words of the wise are more to be heeded than the shouting of a ruler among fools."

In praise of the unhurried moment

There is a certain comfort in places where nobody is in much of a hurry, even when they are technically busy.

CORNER OF KINDNESS
By CHIP

I was reminded of that the other day standing in line at a small local shop here in Northeast Connecticut, the kind of place where the counter has been worn smooth by decades of elbows and patience.

The line wasn't moving quickly. Someone ahead of me was asking a careful question, the sort of question that doesn't come with a stopwatch. No one sighed. No one checked a watch. We all knew we would get where we were going eventually.

I've come to believe that this quiet agreement — that some things take the time they take — is one of the unspoken kindnesses of our little corner of the state.

In many parts of the world, speed has become a virtue all by itself. Faster is better. Quicker is smarter. Waiting is treated like a failure. But here, waiting often turns into something else. It turns into conversation. Or observation. Or simply a few minutes to stand still and think.

I noticed a man leaning on the counter, listening carefully to the person ahead of him, nodding as if the answer might be useful someday. I noticed the clerk wasn't rushing either. He was explaining, not selling. That distinction matters. When someone explains something to you, they're investing a little piece of themselves in the exchange.

It struck me that kindness doesn't always arrive with a grand gesture or a heartfelt speech. Sometimes it shows up as patience, plain and unadorned.

I think many of us were taught patience the same way we learned to tie our shoes — not through lectures, but through repetition. You waited your turn. You listened before speaking. You learned that not every silence needed to be filled. Somewhere along the way, those lessons went out of fashion in the wider world, but they never quite left Northeast Connecticut.

We still wave when someone lets us pull out into traffic. We still hold doors without announcing it. We still stop mid-sentence if someone else starts speaking, then gesture for them to go first. None of it feels heroic. It's just how things are done.

At home, my wife sometimes teases me for lingering over small tasks. I'll reread a set of instructions or check something twice that probably doesn't need it. But I like knowing what I'm doing before I do it. I like the idea that careful work is a form of respect — for the job, for the tools, and for the people who might be affected by the outcome.

That habit may be a little old-fashioned, but it has served me well. And I see it reflected in others around here all the time. Folks take pride in doing things right, even if it takes a bit longer.

There's also a gentler side to this slower rhythm. When life doesn't constantly demand your immediate reaction, you start noticing things you'd otherwise miss. A familiar face you haven't seen in a while. A new sign in a shop window. A conversation that drifts from practical matters into stories and memories.

Those moments build a quiet sense of belonging. You don't need to announce it. You feel it.

I sometimes worry that the outside world looks at places like ours and assumes we are behind, or stuck, or resistant to change. The truth is simpler. We're selective. We choose which changes are worth making and which habits are worth keeping.

Kindness, patience, and attention are habits worth keeping.

As I left the shop that day, the line had moved, everyone had gotten what they came for, and no one seemed inconvenienced by the extra time it took. In fact, a few people were still talking as they headed out the door, conversations unfinished but unhurried.

That felt like a small victory for the human pace of things.

In a world that often urges us to speed up, there's something quietly powerful about choosing to slow down — about giving one another the grace of time. Here in Northeastern Connecticut, that choice shows up every day in a thousand small ways.

And that, to my mind, is kindness doing its best work — not loudly, not dramatically, but steadily, one patient moment at a time.

Treason

Why some investors aren’t loving their financial advisors any longer — and what they’re switching to instead

To the Editor:

Donnie Tyrant said Republicans should “take over the voting” from states as he repeated his dis-proven claims of voter fraud. He said in a podcast by former deputy FBI Director Dan Bongino, “The Republicans should say, ‘We want to take over. We should take over the voting in at least 15 places. The Republicans ought to nationalize the voting.’”

It may only be an expression of free speech for an average citizen to express such a view, but to me it is fully treasonous for the President of the United States to do so. He presumably took an oath the uphold and defend the Constitution.

Article 1 of the Constitution states that “the times, places, and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives, shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof.” The Supreme Court has ruled many times that states have control over voter registration, election supervision, prevention of fraud, counting of ballots and more. For the President to openly advocate the outright defying of the Constitution is an admission by Donnie Tyrant that he is guilty of treason.

This issue was directly addressed last April by U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly in her ruling that blocked 2 provisions of Executive Order 14248. The first would require documentary proof of citizenship to register to vote in federal elections and the second ordered federal voter registration agencies to “assess” citizenship before providing a federal voter registration form to people who receive public assistance.

She wrote, “The Framers of our Constitution recognized that power over election rules could be abused, either to destroy the national government or to dis-empower the people from acting as a check on their elected representatives. They assigned no role at all to the President. Put simply, our Constitution does not allow the President to impose unilateral changes to federal election procedures.”

The danger here is that Donnie Tyrant has sown the seeds of treason that his true believers can hang onto to help bolster their admiration of an idiot who is advocating our destruction.

The ICEman cometh

To the Editor:

Voters in Connecticut’s 52nd District (Woodstock, Somers, Stafford, and Union) should know that their State Representative, Kurt Vail, walked out in the middle of Gov. Lamont’s State of the State speech last week. They should also understand why.

The Governor emphasized in the speech recent deep cuts to the federal safety net, especially health care and food support, and how Connecticut has been able to make up for some of the shortfall. He also remarked on the division in the country, but heaped praise on Connecticut’s police forces: “We have perhaps the best trained police force in the World, making Connecticut one of the very safest states.” “I want to give a shout out to the Connecticut State Police and their municipal police brothers and sisters,” he said. “They are of, by, and for the community, keeping you safe like looking out for a neighbor.”

He went on to say, “ICE is just the opposite. They see the world as us versus them. They are not trained to deescalate — they are barely trained at all. They hide behind a mask, they come to Connecticut — and Minneapolis — to arrest people outside of schools or courthouses, often based on the color of their skin. Some of our Hispanic kids are scared to go to school. Those kids at Wilbur Cross High School in New Haven — we call them Dreamers; the White House calls them criminal aliens. That young mother shot twice in the head in Minneapolis — the White House called her a domestic terrorist; she reminded me of my daughter. ICE, everywhere you go uninvited, violence follows. Go home. We are keeping Connecticut safe without you.”

After the speech, Vail was quoted in the Danbury News-Times: “It was extremely unprofessional.

You either support law enforcement or you don’t. You can’t pick and choose those battles. You’re putting ICE at-risk. I know people in ICE. They’re highly trained professionals.”

I was disappointed in Vail’s walking out of the speech and in his comments; I’ve always thought of him as pretty down to earth, and blessed with a modicum of common sense, even though I disagree with some of his positions on philosophical grounds. So, I thought of several questions I’d want to ask him if I ever ran into him:

First, does he think that if you disagree with or feel that someone in law enforcement did something wrong, you are against all law enforcement? Second, is he aware that ICE now gets about 8 weeks (47 days exactly) of training (the Trump administration cut it from the previous 22 weeks), as compared to Connecticut State Police’s 30 weeks, or the Hartford Police Department’s 30 weeks, or the Army National Guard’s 12-28 weeks)? Thirdly, does he believe as JD Vance does that ICE agents are protected by “absolute immunity” from state prosecution because they are acting in a federal capacity? Fourth, has he watched the videos of the killings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti? Does he think the officers involved in those two shootings showed evidence of “good training?” Should they be spared an investigation? Should they be immune from prosecution? And, does he want a bigger ICE presence in Connecticut? Does he want a “surge?”

These are all crucial questions because their answers might help sort out what is just slavish political loyalty from what are deeply held positions based on a moral compass and philosophy.

JOHN A. DAY, JR.
WOODSTOCK VALLEY

For decades, the typical financial advisor relationship followed a familiar pattern: periodic performance reviews, portfolio updates, and a heavy emphasis on market returns. For a long time, that was enough for many people. We’ve never considered it enough at WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors and today, many investors don’t either.

The financial lives of individuals and families have become more complex, and many advisors simply haven’t kept pace. Here’s where many financial advisory and wealth management firms may be falling short, and what you as a client should be looking for instead.

Performance alone is no longer the value proposition

Across the industry, we are seeing a meaningful shift. More financial planning and wealth management clients are questioning the value they receive. And increasingly, many are choosing to look elsewhere for financial guidance. Some are looking to AI-driven platforms. Many are seeking out financial advisors and wealth managers that will deliver more depth, clarity, and partnership. This isn’t about impatience or unrealistic expectations — it’s about evolution.

Markets are more transparent than ever. Clients can see benchmarks, index returns, and market commentary in real time. When an advisor’s value is framed almost exclusively around “beating the market,” disappointment is almost inevitable.

Clients today understand that markets are cyclical and largely uncontrollable. What frustrates them is not short-term volatility; it’s the absence of proactive planning, context, and strategy when markets move. Advisors who lead every conversation with performance numbers without tying them back to personal goals, risk tolerance, and long-term outcomes are missing one of the items that clients care about most.

Today’s investors want to know: How does this impact my life, my plans, and my confidence about the future? They also want their advisors to care about and strategize for those things as much as they care about returns.

That requires something that bread-and-butter periodic meetings or even AI can ever provide — the foundation of a truly personal relationship combined with real-life experience, up-to-the-minute knowledge and the ability to strategize on the go based not only on what’s happening in the markets, but what’s happening in the client’s life and how all those pieces combine to inform the best strategy for them.

On e-dimensional advice in a multi-dimensional world

Financial decisions no longer live in silos. Taxes, estate planning, retirement, business succession, charitable giving, and family dynamics are deeply interconnected. Yet many advisors still operate transactionally — managing investments in isolation while leaving clients to coordinate the rest on their own.

This creates friction and fatigue. Clients don’t want to act as the project manager of their own financial lives, translating advice between advisors, CPAs, and attorneys. When advisors fail to integrate these elements into a cohesive strategy, clients may feel unsupported — even if the portfolio itself is performing reasonably well.

The advisors gaining loyalty today are those who think holistically and collaborate seamlessly across disciplines. At WHZ, we pride ourselves on the fact that this has been our approach since day one.

A lack of proactive communication

Another common source of dissatisfaction is silence, especially during periods of uncertainty. Clients are quick to notice when communication is reactive rather than intentional. Waiting for a client to call with concerns, or limiting outreach to scheduled review meetings, sends the wrong message.

In contrast, proactive advisors anticipate questions, explain changes before they become problems, and reach out consistently with perspective, not panic. Trust isn’t built by avoiding difficult conversations. It’s built by addressing them early and clearly.

For example, at WHZ we provide our clients with a monthly newsletter containing timely and valuable articles, as well as a monthly market update that includes insight into how we’re positioning portfolios in response. In addition to that we send regular communications that are specific to clients’ interests and needs and we ensure that meetings happen whenever they’re needed, not just on a set schedule.

The relationship feels transactional, not personal

Perhaps the most important reason clients leave is emotional, not technical. Many eventually realize they don’t feel truly known by their advisor. When advice feels generic, meetings feel rushed, or conversations fail to evolve as life changes, clients begin to question whether their advisor is really invested in them — or just managing accounts. This is especially true during major transitions such as retirement, inheritance, divorce, or the sale of a business.

What clients are switching to

When clients leave, they aren’t just leaving something behind; they’re moving toward something better suited to their situation. Increasingly, investors may seek advisors who offer:

A clearly defined planning process, not just investment management

Proactive, transparent communication

Integrated tax, estate, and retirement planning

A team-based approach that provides continuity and depth

A relationship grounded in trust, education, and long-term partnership

In short, they want confidence — not just competence. At WHZ, we believe this shift is both healthy and overdue. Clients deserve more than portfolio oversight; they deserve a strategic partner who helps them make informed decisions, navigate complexity, and move forward with clarity at every stage of life.

That is why our approach centers on comprehensive planning through our “Plan Well. Invest Well. Live Well.™” strategic process, as well as collaborative teams and a long-term relationship built on understanding, not transactions. When clients feel heard, informed, and supported, the relationship stops being about markets — and starts being about living well.

If you’ve been questioning whether your current advisory relationship truly serves you, that question alone may be your answer. If you’re ready for a more thoughtful, proactive financial partnership, we invite you to connect with our team to see how we can help you create a strategy that provides “Absolute Confidence. Unwavering Partnership. For Life.” Contact us for a complimentary consultation at whzwealth.com or call (860) 928-2341.

This weekend, we celebrate Presidents Day. I’m sure many of you reading this recall when we celebrated both Lincoln’s and Washinton’s birthdays on Feb. 12 and 22, respectively, and didn’t necessarily have school or work off. It seems fitting to write a little about the history of the day. The Georgia Southern University Web site had more than I had heard before. “Four presidents actually have birthdays in February: George Washington (the 22nd), Abraham Lincoln (the 12th), William Henry Harrison (the 9th), and Ronald Reagan (the 6th). But, in terms of Federal law, there is no “Presidents Day” — the holiday is officially Washington’s Birthday.

“The story of Presidents’ Day date begins in 1800. Following the death of George Washington in 1799, his Feb. 22 birthday became a perennial day of remembrance. At the time, Washington was venerated as the most important figure in American history, and events like the 1832 centennial of his birth and the start of construction of the Washington Monument in 1848 were cause for national celebration. In 1862, Lincoln issued a proclamation declaring February 22nd a day of celebration honoring Washington. A Federal holiday on February 22nd was officially passed into law in 1879... The shift from Washington’s Birthday to Presidents’ Day began in the late 1960s, when Congress proposed a measure known as the Uniform Monday Holiday Act... This law sought to shift the celebration of several federal holidays from specific dates to a series of predetermined Mondays. The Uniform Monday Holiday Act also included a provision to combine the celebration of Washington’s birthday with that of Abraham Lincoln, which fell on February 12. Lincoln’s Birthday had long been a state holiday in places like Illinois. Eventually, the main piece of the Uniform Monday Holiday Act passed in 1968 and officially took effect in 1971 following an executive order from President Richard M. Nixon.” (<https://georgiasouthern.libguides.com/c.php?g=1119310&p=8176854>)

I decided to check past Windham County Transcripts on the Killingly Public Library website (killinglypl.org) to see how area residents from years ago were honoring the presidents. The Wednesday, Feb. 24, 1892 Transcript had a small clip, “The people of this village were at an early hour reminded Monday morning that it was Washington’s birthday anniversary by a salute fired by our patriotic young friend, Walter Kies, who has remembered the day after the same fashion for a number of years. The flag across Main St. was unfurled by the American Mechanics.” (p. 2 of 4).

A few years later Brooklyn residents happily displayed their flags, “The birthday of George Washington... was duly honored in this village by display of flags. So many of our citizens are absent at this time of the year that fewer were shown than usual on such days”. (WCT, Wednesday, Feb. 26, 1903, p. 6 of 8).

Did you remember that the President’s holiday was also a time for car sales? The Thursday, Feb. 20, 1958 Transcript carried a full page ad, “You are cordially invited

Worcester Polytechnic Institute announces Fall Dean’s List

WORCESTER, Mass. — Worcester Polytechnic Institute (WPI) has announced its Dean’s List for academic excellence for the Fall 2025 semester.

The criteria for the WPI Dean’s List differ from that of most other universities as WPI does not compute a grade point average (GPA). Instead, WPI students are named to the Dean’s List based on the amount of work completed at the A level in courses and hands-on projects.

“WPI’s academic programs are rigorous and require a level of independence beyond what is required in traditional courses. WPI students work on real-world, open-ended problems on campus and in communities around the globe. Far from being simple academic exercises, the projects students complete have genuine and lasting impacts in our partner communities,” said Provost Andrew Sears. “Some of this nation’s best and brightest students come to WPI to study engineering, science, business, and the humanities. Those named to the Dean’s List have excelled in all of their work, and we are exceptionally proud of these outstanding students.”

The following students were named to the Fall 2025 Dean’s List:

to Open House Saturday, Feb. 22 at your local automobile showrooms... Take advantage of our Washington Birthday Bonuses! Carito Buick (North Main Street, Danielson; Danielson Sales and Service, Inc. (231 No. Main St., Danielson), Del Chevrolet Sales Co. (2 So. Main St.-Brooklyn), Phillips’ Garage, Inc. -Pontiac & GM Truck Dealers (Canterbury Rd., Plainfield); Griffin Oldsmobile (Route 6, South Killingly), Wm. J. Smith-Rambler Sales & Service (1 Mechanic St.), Edson Motors, Inc. -Chrysler, Plymouth, Renault (Westcott Hill Rd.), Santerre Motor Sales-Dodge, Plymouth (Westcott Road), Turner Motor Sales-new Hillmans and Internationals (No. Main Street, Danielson). (p. 5 of 12). I’m sure that many older readers recall a few of these showrooms as well as cars that are no longer being made. Please feel free to share your memories. I did not grow up around here, and so there were a few showrooms that I’d never heard of.

I am always on the lookout for interesting tidbits while I research a particular topic. How many of you remember when Killingly had a Blackhawks Hockey Club? The Thursday, Feb. 15, 1973 Windham County Transcript had a write-up about their recent win. “Langevin Leads Blackhawks Over Southbridge 3-1, by Gregory Wade. Outnumbered 3 to 1, the Killingly Hockey Club Blackhawks took the ice in Southbridge, Mass. to play the Southbridge Hockey Club in a game which saw more excitement than any other the team has played. Plagued with excuses and previous commitments, the Blackhawks large roster was dwindling down to seven defensemen and two goalies. Danny Langevin was the primary reason the team actually won. Dan’s fine puck-handling, shooting, and passing, as well as his defense set a great example for the other Blackhawks, while goalies George Atsales and Richard Murray were sharp in the nets... Fine all around play from Langevin, Atsales, Murray, Bob Ricard, Vance Carter, Dave Crowley, Greg Wade, and Steve and Mike DeVillez gave the Blackhawks their fourth win in seven outings. Southbridge is now 5-2.” (p. 9/10).

Pomfret Historical Society Fireside Chat to feature "The Amazing Mrs. Whistler"

POMFRET — The topic for February's Fireside Chat presented by Pomfret Historical Society at the Vanilla Bean Café Feb. 20 at 7 p.m. will be "The Amazing Mrs. Whistler," the mother of famed artist James Whistler. The Whistlers spent two years in Pomfret while James and his brother William attended school.

Whistler's mother, Anna McNeill Whistler, blew into Pomfret in December of 1849 to settle her husband's probate and enroll her sons James and William in Roswell Park's Christ Church Hall Academy. Her husband, George Washington Whistler had died of cholera in Russia in April of 1849 while designing and building the railroad from St. Petersburg to Moscow for Tzar Nicholas. After packing up the household in Russia and shipping her husband's body to Stonington, CT for burial, she focused her attention on educating her sons at the reputable academy in Pomfret. She met with the Pomfret probate judge, in December of 1849, rented a house just west of the Vanilla Bean from Mrs. Hannah Searles, and arranged to have the family furnishings and belongings shipped to Pomfret by train. A force to be reconned with,

Anna Whistler dug into and became an integral part of Pomfret Street from 1850 – 1852 when "The Street" (as it was called) was thriving with commerce and high society. Anna Whistler's world gives us a sneak preview of Pomfret's Gilded Age, the topic of the March Fireside Chat.

Bring a friend, settle in for food, and drink from the Vanilla Bean menu and enjoy a delightful program that sheds light on the artist James Whistler and his mother.

Program from 7 – 8 p.m. Arrive early to order food and get a good seat. For more information, contact windsong@snet.net or call 860-465-7228.

or poor – We try to focus these projects on improving the situation overall for the traffic signals assets in our state,” said Podgorski.

Nicholas Welsh, Project Engineer for the signal replacements, detailed what can be expected at the Route 169 and 171 intersections with Stonebridge Road.

“At this intersection we are proposing a mast arm on the northwest corner and the northeast corner as well as the southwest corner. We may be pursuing an easement on the southwest corner to give our contractor a little bit more room to install that mast arm foundation,” said Welsh. “We’re also installing a crosswalk on the west leg which means that pedestrian facilities will be installed on the northwest and the southwest corner as well.”

Any properties impacted by right of way acquisitions will receive notification from the DOT. Actual work on the intersections is still a long way away. The DOT is expected to complete meetings with municipalities and utility companies in the near future. The design phase is not expected to be complete until March of 2027 and the actual replacement won’t take place until spring of 2028.

While Woodstock is the only Northeastern town included in the project, nearby Plainfield will also see one signal replaced. Other towns included on the list are Groton, Killingworth, Ledyard, New London, Norwich, Preston, Stonington, and Windham.

The full recording of the presentation can be viewed on the Connecticut Department of Transportation YouTube channel.

Carl Peters Wold, Jr., 90

Carl Peters Wold, Jr., 90, of Danielson, passed away peacefully at home on January 29, 2026.

Carl was born on January 24, 1936, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, to William and Gunhild (Wold) Hughes. Shortly after birth, he was adopted by his maternal uncle, Carl Wold, who preceded him in death. Carl grew up in Danielson and graduated from Killingly High School in 1955.

Following graduation, Carl enlisted in the US Navy, serving from 1956 to 1958 as a Radarman aboard the USS Exultant. Though recommended for Officer Training School, he chose to return home to help his ailing father with the family business, Wold Tool Engineering. Carl would become President and Owner of the company, building it into a true family enterprise where he employed many relatives over the years. His determined, methodical approach to work and life served him well in business and beyond.

Carl was a man of many passions. An avid pilot, boater, and golfer, he found joy in both adventure and precision. He was a skilled woodworker who loved creating with his hands. Perhaps his proudest project was The Great Lakes, a biplane he built alongside his dear friend Bill Curtis, which continues to fly to this day.

In 1959, Carl married Nancy Pike, beginning a partnership that would span 66 years. Together they made Danielson their home and raised three children. In recent years, as Nancy faced the challenges of Alzheimer’s disease, Carl became her devoted caregiver and steadfast north star, caring for her at home with the same determination and love that defined their entire marriage.

Carl was a long-time member of the Danielson United Methodist Church, a beloved uncle to many nieces, nephews, along with many great and great-great nieces and nephews, and a good friend to all who knew him.

He is survived by his beloved wife Nancy (Pike) Wold; his children Eric Wold and wife Heather, Kristen Siemiatkaska and husband Eric, and Curt Wold and wife Soo Hyun; granddaughters Maggie and Julia; and many extended family members and dear friends.

Visitation will be held at Tillinghast Funeral Home on Saturday, March 14, 2026 from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m., followed by a service at 11:00 a.m. The family welcomes guests to a luncheon following the service at Hank’s Restaurant in Brooklyn.

Brian M. Tvelia, Jr. earns Westview’s Employee of the Month award

DAYVILLE — Brian M. Tvelia, Jr. earned recognition as Westview’s Employee of the Month for December 2025.

Tvelia is a Licensed Practical Nurse at Westview Health Care Center, where his commitment to teamwork defines his daily practice. His steady, supportive role is evident as he collaborates with multiple groups of doctors, nurses, and nursing assistants throughout the week. Alongside his strong command of nursing knowledge, his affirmative demeanor draws colleagues, residents, and patients alike toward his dependable presence. In every care setting he enters, Brian ensures that compassion is abundant.

Tvelia earned his Licensed Practical Nurse certification through Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester, Mass. Raised in Milford, Mass., he developed an early appreciation for small-town America and the importance of community involvement. He carries that philosophy with him today—actively seeking opportunities to support his neighbors in Danielson. When Brian and his wife, Mandy, first moved to northeast Connecticut, he looked for local ways to complement his civic life. He currently serves on the Killingly Housing Authority, imparting a direct contribution to his town. His dedication to community also extends into his role as a father. Brian proudly supports his children, Noah and Jessi, in their interests and activities, including coaching their youth soccer and basketball teams with enthusiasm and humility—as he cheerfully admits to learning alongside them. Brian’s altruistic outlook at Westview mirrors his approach to life as a whole: showing up fully, supporting others, and contributing in every way he can.

Since settling in Connecticut’s Quiet Corner, Brian and his family have embraced the region’s natural beauty and strong agricultural roots. Inspired by the area’s family-farm culture, they established a “microfarm” on a half-acre of their property. Their agrarian efforts include a vegetable garden and a flock of chickens—housed in a creatively repurposed playground structure. Brian appreciates the increased self-sufficiency this provides for his family through fresh eggs and crisp garden produce. In addition to their nine chickens, Brian’s family includes two dogs and a cat. As a rare solo activity, Brian enjoys playing drums. While he can play both traditional acoustic and electric drums, he prefers the physical resonance of acoustic percussion. Drumming helps Brian to exercise the energies of the day, offering creative balance alongside the many responsibilities that shape his life.

Reflecting on his recognition, Brian expressed gratitude rooted firmly in collaboration: “There may be an ‘I’ in ‘Westview,’ but it’s important to note that it starts with ‘We!’ Thank you to Westview as an organization and to all of the amazing people surrounding me. It’s an honor to be selected as Westview’s Employee of the Month—but if it wasn’t for everybody here working so well together, I wouldn’t be able to have the same impact. This recognition is a credit to all of the teams I am lucky to be a part of here at Westview.”

Westview Administrator David T. Panteleakos commended Brian’s professionalism and collegial spirit, adding “Brian exemplifies what it means to be a consistent team-centered nursing professional. His clinical knowledge, respectful communication, and genuine kindness elevate every team member he works with. Brian brings confidence and camaraderie into complex clinical conversations, and that balance is felt among colleagues and residents alike. We are grateful for the dedication and consistent positivity he brings to Westview each day. Congratulations to Brian!”

Westview Health Care Center is a 103-bed inpatient skilled nursing facility, which includes a distinct and self-contained 28-bed sub-acute short term rehabilitation unit and outpatient physical, occupational and speech therapies including: Sports Medicine, Adolescent/Pediatric, Adult, and Aquatic Outpatient Centers, all dedicated to providing outstanding quality health care services. The Dayville, Connecticut facility is consistently ranked among the top nursing facilities in the nation, according to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services as well as U.S. News and World Report, consecutively for the past 18 years.
