Putnam voters approve WPCA project expenses

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

PUTNAM — Putnam voters approved a trio of Water Pollution Control questions during a referendum on June 30. All three questions sought investments with a combined price tag of $11.6 million.

The referendum saw a small turnout. In total, only 114 voters cast a ballot during the referendum, less than 2% of the registered voters in the town. However, the results were never in question as the numbers came in with all three questions receiving nearly identical votes of support.

The first question sought to appropriate $2.6 million for a Sludge Handling Improvement Project. This will include the construction of a new gravity thickener, the second at the plant. This passed by a 93-21 vote.

The most expensive question on the ballot was also passed by a 93-21 margin. This sought $5.8 million for the Peake Brook Water Treatment Units Replacement Project.

The upgrades will include modernization of four treatment units through recoating, piping and valve upgrades, and monitoring and control equipment replacement.

Another question sought to appropriate $3.2 million for the Lead Service and Replacement Program. This will involve removing any lead lines still in use in Putnam's water distribution system. This was the outlier of the three in terms of voting outcome earning 96 votes of approval to 18 votes against.

The Environmental Protection Agency's Lead and Copper Rule Improvements mandate requires that all municipalities submit plans for replacing lead pipes before Nov. 1, 2027. Towns will have until the end of 2037 to replace these lines. This approved funding allows Putnam WPCA to proceed with its own plans to identify and replace these pipes.

Paws Cat Shelter to hold can and bottle drive

PUTNAM — Paws Cat Shelter is holding a Can and Bottle Drive on Saturday, July 11 from noon to 3 p.m. at the shelter, located at 74 School St. in Putnam. Please separate two-liter bottles. Pet food and donations are always welcome and greatly appreciated.

Paws is a non-profit, all volunteer organization caring for the cats of our communities. For more info or to make a monetary donation, contact Paws at 860-315-1228.

Thompson mulls bridge replacement projects

THOMPSON — Nicholas Donohue, First Selectman, has announced that the Town of Thompson is contemplating projects to replace the Spicer Road Bridge Five Mile River and Brandy Hill Road Bridge over Quaddick Lake. The bridge replacement projects would receive federal funds under the Federal Local Bridge Program administered by the Connecticut Department of Transportation.

If undertaken, the project design would be expected to begin in early 2027, with construction likely in 2029 or 2030.

Donohue points out that local and state policy encourages early information to citizens on such projects and encourages people to raise any concerns with municipal officials early in the planning process. Persons wanting additional information should contact Public Works Department at 860-923-2680.

The cost of the bridge replacement would receive 80 percent reimbursement from federal aid with the remaining 20% paid from state funds.

The federal aid for the project was authorized under the Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st century Act and/or Fixing America's Surface Transportation Act and/or Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act, administered by the Federal Highway Administration and the Connecticut Department of Transportation.

Putnam unveils America 250 plaque

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

PUTNAM — The Town of Putnam celebrated the United States's 250th anniversary with the unveiling of a new commemorative plaque in Rotary Park on the 4th of July, acknowledging the town's place in history and the legacy of its namesake, General Israel Putnam, who was an essential leader during several famous conflicts during the Revolution including the Battle of Bunker Hill.

Spearheaded by the town's Americian250 Committee, the unveiling included a short ceremony celebrating the patriotism and colonial legacy of Northeastern Connecticut. Both local and state leaders turned out to speak at the event with most statements drawing from one simple idea: that together we as a people created this nation, and together we can continue to move it forward.

Mayor Barney Seney helped kick off the festivities reminding everyone of the men and women that fought to help us reach 250 years, and how important unity will be in continuing the legacy of the United States.

"A lot of people forget what this country has gone through over 250 years. What they don't realize is that the veterans that serve are why we are here today," said Mayor Seney. "The forefathers had enough common sense back then to address the needs of the individual citizens of the country and I think we've lost a lot of that over the last 250 years. We don't have the compassion like we had before for our country, and today I can't understand why. Until you serve and you see what a third-world country is like, then you realize how good this country is."

Putnam's representatives in Hartford also contributed to the ceremony. State Sen. Mae Flexer wasn't able to attend the ceremony in person but sent along a message which was read by Putnam America250 Committee member and Selectman Gloria Marion.

"As a town named for General Israel Putnam, this celebration carries special meaning," Flexer wrote. "He embodied the spirit of service and sacrifice that helped shape our nation. Putnam's own story reflects the same American spirit - Like so many communities across Connecticut, Putnam reminds us that America's story has always been built by people working together to create something better than themselves."

State Rep. Chris Stewart's statements also captured the sentiment of the day, noting all the different kinds of people who make up the citizenship of the United States and how each one of us plays a role in defining the nation's identity.

"Our veterans, those that sacrifice for us just to sit here, those that work hours in hospitals to save lives and keep our country going, those that work on fire trucks and in police cars keeping us safe, those who are in classrooms teaching

Day Kimball Health recognizes James Hayward as Employee of the Month for May

PUTNAM — Day Kimball Health (DKH) has named James “JD” Hayward, BSN, RN, as its Employee of the Month for May. Hayward joined DKH in November 2022 as a night-shift nurse in the Intensive Care Unit (ICU), where he provided care for patients with a wide range of complex medical conditions. Through his dedication to patient care and strong clinical expertise, he advanced to his current role as ICU clinical coordinator on the day shift.

In his leadership role, Hayward continues to provide direct patient care while supporting staff development, coordinating schedules and helping to train new nurses joining the unit.

“JD exemplifies the compassion, professionalism and commitment to excellence that define DKH,” said Kyle Kramer, CEO of Day Kimball Health. “His dedication to both our patients and his colleagues has made a meaningful impact on our ICU team and the entire organization. We are grateful for his servant leadership and proudly recognize him as Employee of the Month.”

Hayward has been a nurse for five years and brings a diverse clinical background to his role. In addition to his work at DKH, he recently expanded his clinical practice as a home infusion nurse.

When asked about receiving this recognition, Hayward credited his colleagues for their support and teamwork.

“I am truly honored to be named Employee of the Month,” Hayward said. “I share this recognition with the incredible team I work alongside every day. The nurses, patient care technicians, hospital staff and leadership team have supported me and given me the opportunity to provide the level of care that I believe every patient deserves. This award reflects the dedication and hard work of our entire ICU team.”

Hayward said the most rewarding part of his work is caring for patients and helping them feel safe and supported during difficult times.

A Connecticut native, Hayward lives in Killingly with his wife and two dogs. He earned a Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences and also holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Saint Anselm College.

Stop & Shop fundraiser to support Eastern students

WILLIMANTIC — Stop & Shop will support Eastern Connecticut State University students facing food insecurity throughout the month of July through the “Bloomin’ 4 Good” program. During the month-long initiative, Stop & Shop will donate $1 to Eastern’s on-campus food pantry, Shawn’s Cupboard, for every specially marked $11.99 bouquet of flowers sold in its Willimantic location.

Donations will be used to keep shelves stocked with fresh produce and nonperishable food items, supporting student health and wellbeing year-round. While the pantry is quiet during the summer months, administrators note increased use and need among the student body during fall and spring semesters. “Every dollar raised will be used to support Eastern students who are experiencing food insecurity,” said Michelle Delaney, vice president for Student Affairs. “We are grateful for Stop & Shop’s ongoing support and partnership in meeting the needs of our students.”

Stop & Shop’s Willimantic location has a history of supporting Eastern students. The grocery store donated $10,000 to Shawn’s Cupboard in spring 2025 (an increase of $7,500 from the year before) and supported Eastern through two fundraisers in fall 2025 - the Community Bags program and “Bloomin’ 4 Good.” Before that, Eastern was the recipient of the “Bloomin’ 4 Good” program in both spring 2025 and fall 2024. “Without Stop & Shop and our wonderful benefactors, Shawn’s Cupboard would not be able to keep the pantry as full or offer as much of a variety of food to our students,” noted Nancy Brennan of Eastern’s Campus Ministry, which oversees the student food pantry. “It is through their generosity that students are getting enough to eat, which makes them able to meaningfully engage in their classes and in society.”

For more information, contact Stop & Shop “Bloomin’ 4 Good” program manager Melissa Hansen at (603) 380-9349 or stopandshop@bloomin4good.com. stopandshop@bloomin4good.com.

Your estate plan just got an upgrade: Here's what to do now

For a long time, estate planning conversations were shaped by one big question: "Will my estate be taxable?"

That question still matters for some families. But for many households, the bigger question now is more practical: "Will my plan actually work the way I want it to?"

The One Big Beautiful Bill Act, signed into law on July 4, 2025, made significant changes to federal tax rules, credits, and deductions. For estate planning specifically, the 2026 federal estate tax basic exclusion amount is now $15 million per individual, up from $13.99 million for 2025. Married couples may be able to protect up to $30 million with proper planning. The annual gift tax exclusion also remains $19,000 per recipient in 2026.

That is a meaningful update for many households, but it doesn't make estate planning less important. In some cases, it makes a review even more important and timely, because plans written under older tax assumptions may no longer fit the family's current goals.

Review old bypass and AB trust language before it becomes a problem

One of the first places to look is an older will or revocable trust that includes bypass trust, credit shelter trust, or AB trust language.

These provisions were commonly used when the federal estate tax exemption was much lower. The basic idea was to divide assets at the first spouse's death so that each spouse's exemption could be used efficiently. That strategy made sense for many couples at the time.

Today, for families well below the federal estate tax threshold, that same language may create unnecessary complexity. It may force assets into a trust when the surviving spouse expected flexibility. It may create administrative costs, separate tax filings, or less favorable income tax treatment. And it may no longer provide much federal estate tax benefit.

That does not mean these trusts are always wrong. They can still be valuable for asset protection, blended families, remarriage concerns, creditor protection, or making sure assets ultimately pass to children or other intended beneficiaries. The key is not to assume the document is still right just because it was right when it was drafted.

Estate planning is not just for high-net-worth families

The higher federal estate tax exclusion may take many families out of federal estate tax territory, but proper estate planning is about much more than federal estate tax.

Most families still need a plan for who can act if they become incapacitated, who inherits specific assets, who makes healthcare decisions, and how beneficiaries receive money. That means reviewing durable powers of attorney, healthcare proxies, living wills, guardianship provisions for minor children, and beneficiary designations on retirement accounts and life insurance.

These documents are often where problems show up. A retirement account may still name an

FINANCIAL FOCUS

JONATHAN MATTHEWS
ASSOCIATE VP,

& RELATIONSHIPS

ex-spouse. A life insurance policy may list a deceased parent. A will may name a guardian who has moved away or is no longer the right fit. None of those issues require a taxable estate to create real stress for a family.

New rules also matter for everyday planning

Several OBDDA provisions affect families who are not traditionally considered high net worth. For example, the 2026 standard deduction is $32,200 for married couples filing jointly, $16,100 for single filers, and $24,150 for heads of household. Taxpayers age 65 and older may also be eligible for an additional $6,000 deduction from 2025 through 2028, subject to income phaseouts.

That matters because income taxes and cash flow are part of estate planning, especially for retirees. If a surviving spouse's tax filing status changes, income taxes can change too. If one spouse becomes ill or passes away, the household may need a plan for required minimum distributions, Social Security decisions, healthcare costs, and liquidity.

There are also new planning tools for families with children. Trump Accounts cannot be funded before July 4, 2026, but eligible children may receive a one-time $1,000 federal contribution, and parents, guardians, employers, or others may make authorized contributions subject to annual limits. These accounts will not replace 529 plans or traditional estate strategies, but they add another option for helping younger family members build long-term financial footing.

The adoption credit was also enhanced, with a portion becoming refundable for tax years after Dec. 31, 2024, which may matter for families growing through adoption.

Coordinate the legal document with the financial plan

A strong estate plan is not just a legal document. It is a coordinated strategy.

Your attorney drafts the documents. Your CPA helps evaluate tax implications. Your financial advisor helps connect the documents to your assets, account titling, beneficiary designations, investment strategy, insurance coverage, and retirement income plan.

That coordination is where many estate plans either succeed or fall short. A trust that is never funded may not accomplish its purpose. A will does not control assets that pass by beneficiary designation. A tax-efficient investment strategy may unravel if assets are titled incorrectly.

At WHZ, our role is to help clients see how all of these different pieces fit together. Estate planning should not feel like a one-time paperwork project. It should be part of an ongoing financial plan that adjusts as laws change, families evolve, and priorities become clearer. (For more information on this, see our step-by-step guide, Smart Strategies for Maximizing Generational Wealth, at whzwealth.com/WealthTransfer.)

If your estate plan was written before the OBDDA, or if it has been more than a few years since you reviewed it, now is a good time to revisit it. The goal is not just to reduce taxes. The goal is to make sure your plan supports the people you love, reflects your wishes, and gives your family clarity when they need it most.

At WHZ, our goal is to help you move forward with Absolute Confidence, Unwavering Partnership, For Life. Schedule a discovery session with us at whzwealth.com or call 860-928-2341 to see how we can help you and your family.

Investing before there is a crisis

Communities are often judged by the things people rarely notice.

When the water is clean, the roads are passable, the lights turn on and the toilets flush, it is easy to take the systems behind those everyday conveniences for granted. Most residents never think about wastewater treatment plants, aging water mains or treatment equipment unless something goes wrong.

That is exactly why Putnam's recent Water Pollution Control referendum deserves attention.

On June 30, voters approved three separate infrastructure projects totaling $11.6 million. The work includes improvements to sludge handling, replacement of aging treatment units at the Peake Brook facility, and the continued effort to identify and remove lead service lines from the town's water system.

None of those projects is glamorous. None is likely to become the topic of conversation at a backyard barbecue. Yet each represents the kind of investment that keeps a community functioning safely and reliably for decades to come.

Infrastructure is often at its best when it is invisible.

The temptation for every municipality is to postpone expensive maintenance. After all, replacing equipment that still appears to be working rarely generates excitement. But history has shown what happens when communities wait too long. Deferred maintenance almost always becomes emergency maintenance, and emergency maintenance almost always costs far more.

Replacing equipment before it fails is simply good stewardship.

The lead service line project is perhaps the clearest example. Federal regulations now require communities across the country to identify and replace remaining lead service lines over the coming years. Putnam could have waited until deadlines were closer. Instead, voters authorized the funding necessary to move forward.

That proactive approach benefits everyone. Removing potential sources of lead from drinking water protects future generations while allowing the town to complete the work in an orderly, planned manner instead of rushing under tighter deadlines later.

The referendum results also reveal another reality that deserves discussion.

Only 114 people cast ballots.

While every referendum is different and specialized infrastructure questions rarely generate large turnouts, the fact remains that decisions involving more than $11 million were effectively made by fewer than 2 percent of the town's registered voters.

There is no suggestion that the outcome was improper. The referendum was conducted according to the rules, and those who participated fulfilled an important civic responsibility. The projects themselves appear to have earned broad support among those who voted.

Still, local government works best when more residents take part.

School budgets, infrastructure projects, municipal borrowing and capital improvements all shape the future of a community as surely as elections do. They determine what services residents receive and how prepared a town will be for the years ahead.

Voting in these referendums is one of the most direct ways citizens influence those decisions.

Putnam's wastewater and water treatment systems may not be visible to most residents, but their importance cannot be overstated. Safe drinking water, environmental protection and reliable public utilities are fundamental to public health and economic development.

Investments like these rarely generate headlines for years afterward. If the work is done well, most people will never notice it at all.

And perhaps that is the highest compliment any infrastructure project can receive. When everything continues to work as it should, it means today's leaders and today's voters made decisions that will quietly serve the community for many years to come.

The view from Canada

To the Editor:

I write this on the eve of America's 250th observance of its founding from our neighbor to the north. It's always interesting to listen to Canadians' views about their neighbor to the south. Almost to a person, Canadians seem better informed about the events occurring in the US than US citizens are. They seem better able to distill the truth from the tidal wave of lies, nonsense, and conspiracy hypotheses spewing from the media and politicians.

No doubt Canadians feel obligated to keep informed because their economy and defense has become so integrated with that of the US over the past few decades. Canadians also thought that they shared important values with Americans. Citizens of the two countries moved freely back and forth across the border, married, worked, and many have dual citizenship.

Now, however, Canada understands that its relationship to the US has completely changed. Our president tore up the trade treaty that he negotiated and bragged about in his first term and instead illegally imposed crushing tariffs. He regularly threatens Canadian sovereignty and his ambassador taunts and insults his Canadian hosts. Canadian citizens have been illegally detained while traveling in America. The American administration is actively fomenting a small secession movement in Alberta (a Canadian province). The president belittles the importance of NATO after Canadians fought and died for our country in Afghanistan. Canadians are appalled at inhumane conditions in US concentration camps, especially for children. They see the US that they thought they knew represented by the violence, corruption, waste, bullying, braggadocio, bluff, cruelty, stupidity, vulgarity, and chaos of the American Administration.

Prime Minister Carney recognizes that the US and the world has fundamentally changed and will not return to normal regardless of the result of future US elections. Canada now knows that the US is a threat rather than an ally. The US is very quickly abdicating its role as a leader of the democratic world. "Middle" powers such as Canada, France, the UK, and Germany are shifting their focus away from the US and forming diplomatic relationships and trading alliances with more reliable partners such as China and India. They are beefing up their militaries, shifting defense spending to non-US sources.

A word of caution to a President who fancies annexing Canada: if you think it was hard to make Iran submit to your will, you ain't seen nothing should you try to take over Canada. Canadians will make Afghanistan or Iran or Vietnam look like child's play. Canada is the most highly educated country in the world whose citizens will conduct all sorts of sabotage of US infrastructure just across the most porous border in the world. Given Canadian talent and connections in, and knowledge of the US, water systems, electrical grids, bridges, etc. will be easy targets.

The American Republic has endured dark periods in its history before. Here's hoping the people can preserve it.

BILLY G. TAYLOR
KILLINGLY

$2.2 billion for him, empty pockets for us

To the Editor:

Americans are heading to the polls this November. Let's look at the facts on how the economy is performing under the Trump administration, not the version offered from media outlets espousing government propaganda, but the real version showing up in our paychecks and escalating bills.

On July 3, the financial world was shaken by the release of the June U.S. jobs report, which painted a less-than-rosy picture for the labor market. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the figures fell short of expectations. This led to a swift selloff of the U.S. dollar. The unexpected downturn broke the prevailing narrative of an economy marching towards recovery and rattled investors. (The Tech Advocate, CNBC) The nation's labor force has shrunk by more than 1.3 million people since January 2025. These are not signs of a robust economy.

The unemployment rate did tick down to 4.2 percent, but that's not good news. Reportedly the drop was driven by people leaving the labor force altogether, not by more people finding work. Labor force participation fell to 61.5 percent, the lowest level since March 2021. When Americans give up looking for jobs, they vanish from the unemployment count. That's not a recovery. (Moneywise, CNBC)

As for wages, NPR's chief economics correspondent noted, wage growth isn't matching the pace at which prices have climbed. Trump's war of choice with Iran has only made things financially worse for Americans. Gas and grocery costs continue to squeeze families with no end in sight.

A June NPR/PBS News/Marist poll found that 33% of Americans approve of Trump's handling of the economy, his lowest rating ever on that question, while 60 percent disapprove. The disapproval number includes 65% of independents and 22 percent of Republicans. That figure is even lower than any economic approval rating Joe Biden received during his entire term.

Meanwhile, since returning to the White House, Trump's own finances tell a strikingly different story than the one facing most Americans. Trump's 2025 financial disclosure (a 927-page document), released by the U.S. Office of Government Ethics, showed more than $2 billion in total earnings, a windfall driven substantially by $1.4 billion in gains from his family's cryptocurrency ventures, businesses whose fortunes are closely tied to his own administration's policies. (American Faith, Moneywise)

So, how is your paycheck doing since January 2025? Are you finding it easier or harder to make ends meet? If the answer is "harder," you have the power to say so at the ballot box this November. Vote for candidates who will prioritize policies that strengthen the middle class, create good-paying jobs, lower costs for working families, fight for healthcare for all, protect social security, and expand economic opportunity for all Americans, not just the billionaires at the top.

Voter turnout is more important than ever. Change begins at the ballot box!

LISA ARENDS
BROOKLYN

Celebrating the decent America

To the Editor:

What a lovely Fourth! Tea party at the Pink House, old timey baseball game, incredible soccer games on TV all weekend, happy, skipping children, birthday wishes from across the globe on America's 250th: France, Japan, Ukraine, Uganda, Hungary, Barcelona, Romania, Norway, among many others.

And yet. And yet. And yet. All weekend my mind kept veering to words from the German philosopher Hannah Arendt: "This constant lying is not aimed at making the people believe a lie, but at ensuring that no one believes anything anymore. A people that can no longer distinguish between truth and lies cannot distinguish between right and wrong. And such a people, deprived of the power to think and judge, is, without knowing and willing it, completely subjected to the rule of lies. With such a people, you can do whatever you want."

The America that those countries were celebrating, and that most of us were celebrating? The America without the lies, without the mindless, incessant cruelty, without the hate. The America with decency. Decency? I remember that...

JOHN A. DAY, JR.
WOODSTOCK VALLEY

The Last Green Valley is just a pipe dream

To the Editor:

"No More Distribution Centers!" those silly little signs say. "Save The Last Green Valley!"

Killingly has an industrial park, and the distribution center proposals are either near the industrial park or near the highway. This whole Last Green Valley thing is just a sad reminder that our part of Connecticut doesn't know how good we have it and if we really did what those people want our area would be a lot worse.

First off, it's not worth it to put transportation facilities like distribution centers too far from the highway. Second, what the people screeching and peppering all these little signs around town don't want to acknowledge is that "protecting our rural town" is just a smokescreen for wanting to have no money or make the cost of living more expensive by requiring people to travel further just to get the same rudimentary day-to-day stuff done.

Before my family moved to Connecticut when I was a kid I was growing up in a place more rural than our area is. As I grew up, I often wondered if things would have been better over there.

Lo and behold, one day, my Dad showed me a newspaper article about my old hometown.

The young people there felt like their lives were meaningless, and they'd stand by the railroad tracks every day screaming at trains because they couldn't find anything better to do. Years later, my Dad and I took a trip up there just to see what we missed.

The newspaper article was just the tip of the iceberg.

The downtown was gone. All the small businesses - including the pizza places - gone. The only businesses still doing anything downtown were a laundromat and liquor stores, so if you wanted to get drunk or wash your clothes, you had options.

We noticed very quickly just how much extra driving we were doing just to get the most basic things done. Now imagine that in the Winter with snow and ice. That's what you'll sign up for versus living around here.

We have a highway. Let's benefit from it. Let's adopt the Rhode Island model where we joke about living on a farm a mile from the truck stop by 395.

You do not have to be a member to participate. Pick up a copy of the book at the circulation desk beginning June 15. Amazon had this to say, "Deborah (Samson), impassioned by the cause, disguises herself as a soldier and enlists in the Continental army. Her impressive height and lanky build make her transformation a convincing one, and it isn't long before she finds herself confronting the horrors of war head-on."

I hope that all of you have had a most enjoyable Fourth of July, and have celebrated America's 250th birthday in some fashion. I had to chuckle because I received an email from Family Search saying that I am related to William Williams, a Signer of the Declaration of Independence. He is my sixth cousin eight times removed. Obviously, my genealogical skills are not anywhere near good enough to have figured that one out. William Williams happened to be another of Connecticut's signers. He was born in Lebanon in 1731, the son of minister Solomon Williams and his wife Mary (Porter) Williams. He attended Harvard with plans to be a minister like his father. However, with the onset of the French and Indian War in 1754, he joined the militia and fought for the British. After the war he became a merchant, opening a store in his hometown. "Williams was an early critic of British policies and an activist. He joined the Sons of Liberty, supported the non-importation agreements of 1769 and was sorely disappointed when some of Connecticut's leading merchants began to ignore their commitment to non-importation once most of the Townshend Acts were repealed. His marriage, in 1771, to the daughter of Connecticut's Governor Jonathan Trumbull, the only royal governor to support independence, reinforced his own growing belief that independence was essential." Williams was not appointed a delegate to the Second Continental Congress until July 11, 1776. However, following his arrival in Philadelphia on Aug. 2, he signed the Declaration. (<https://constitutioncenter.org/signers/william-williams>)

I had the great privilege of helping with the dedication of Putnam's America 250 Semiquincentennial plaque in Rotary Park on July 4. I thought it was most fitting that it was placed adjacent to the sheep since men from Northeastern Connecticut, including Israel Putnam, drove sheep to Boston after the port was closed by the British following the Boston Tea Party. The plaque itself says, "Putnam Celebrates

Turn To KILLINGLY page A5

America 250. Many colonists living in this area, now known as Putnam, actively resisted British rule. When the British closed the port of Boston in 1774 following the Boston Tea Party, men from northeastern Connecticut, including the town's namesake Israel Putnam, helped supply the city by walking sheep to Boston. At the time, present-day Putnam was part of the towns of Killingly and Pomfret. In 1774 local patriots erected a Liberty Pole on Killingly Hill, now Putnam Heights. In January 1775, they purchased the nearby common as a training ground for their militia. After the Lexington Alarm on April 19, 1775, local militia members marched to Massachusetts in defense of colonial rights. At the Battle of Bunker Hill in June 1775, Israel Putnam is traditionally credited with urging the troops, "Don't fire 'til you see the whites of their eyes." Following the adoption of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776, residents here proudly supported the new nation. Some served in the militia and Continental Army; others supplied food, weapons, and materials; women made clothing and knit socks for the soldiers. From this community came determined patriots who helped secure the birth of a new nation, The United States of America." The next time you're in Rotary Park, stop and read the plaque for yourself and reflect on all that went on here in Northeastern Connecticut during the Revolutionary era.

I had an email from former Killingly resident Dave Doiron, who reads my column online, asking about a Fourth of July parade in Killingly and reminiscing about years gone by. "I was wondering if there will still be the traditional (at least from my days in Danielson) 4th of July parade in Danielson. I remember it being a pretty big event in the 1950s and '60s. I have pictures from one year when the Nike air defense unit in East Killingly participated, towing a Nike missile in the parade and another photo of a popular kids' show personality, Rex Trailer from Boston's WBZ-TV's Boomtown show. He rode his Palomino horse Goldrush and wore his buckskin costume, waving to the cheering and waving kids lining the parade route. After the new old Westfield Ave. high school was built, there was an impressive fireworks display from the fields between it and Killingly Memorial School. We lived on Hutchins Street at the time and just lay down in our back yard to watch the show. Of course, this was years before the Owen Bell Park was developed, and town commerce was still centered around Main Street Danielson, where the family really could find whatever we needed, from records and everything musical at Oliver's Music on lower Main Street to a small millinery business in a house on nearby Reynolds Street that I remember my mom taking us sons to in the mid-1950s while she shopped for a hat." (email 6/27/2026). Perhaps some of you remember the old parades and can share more memories and even photos.

Now for several interesting tidbits which I came across while researching recent columns. Did you know that a famous 19th century sculptor came from Killingly? "We are pained to announce that Henry Dexter, the well-known sculptor, died on Friday at his home in Cambridge. He was one of the best-known sculptors of Boston, and much of his work has achieved wide reputation.

In his youth he worked as a blacksmith in this town. He has a brother now living in this village." (WCT July 6, 1876, p.2). Wikipedia provided a short biographical sketch. "Henry Dexter was born in Nelson, New York on October 11, 1806. He was apprenticed to a blacksmith shortly after his father's death when his family moved to (Killingly) Connecticut. Dexter taught himself to paint, but was aided in the process by artist Francis Alexander who was his wife's uncle. He moved to Boston in 1836 and opened his own portrait studio. Two years later he began to sculpt famous people, starting with the Reverend Dr. Anderson.] Dexter was completely self-taught and did not seek to study the European or classical Greek styles of his compatriots; for this reason he is considered among the first true American sculptors. Henry Dexter sculpted over 200 busts in plaster and marble between the years of 1838 and 1875. Some of his most famous sculptures are his portraits of Charles Dickens and President James Buchanan. His depiction of President Buchanan was later used to model his U.S. postage stamp which was part of a series depicting the presidents of the United States."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pettiness or principle?

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Richard Adams' characterization of Gov. Ned Lamont as "petty" for declining to support President Trump's proposed 250th State Fair, citing funding concerns.

I have no way of knowing whether Gov. Lamont's decision was motivated solely by fiscal considerations or whether it also reflected a political statement. If it was intended, in part, as a political statement, I commend him for it.

In my view, President Trump's repeated disregard for constitutional norms and the freedoms that define our democracy makes his sponsorship of a celebration of America's 250th anniversary ring hollow. A commemoration of our nation's founding should honor the principles of liberty, the rule of law, and respect for democratic institutions—not simply wrap itself in patriotic symbolism.

Mr. Adams may see Gov. Lamont's decision as petty. I see it as a principled stand. History, I believe, will judge Governor Lamont not as a partisan obstructionist, but as someone who chose principle over political theater.

The ceremony concluded with the unveiling of the plaque and the reading of its text which notes that the colony that would become Putnam, Connecticut actively resisted British rule. Local patriots set up the Liberty Pole on Killingly Hill in 1774, today known as Putnam Heights, and the following year the area hosted training for the militia which eventually marched into Massachusetts following the Lexington Alarm. The plaque also tells of the legacy of Israel Putnam himself and will forever serve as an acknowledgement of the "determined patriots" who helped fight for the birth of a nation.

OBITUARY

Johanne Charlotte Wenger, 79

Johanne Charlotte (Davis) Wenger, 79, passed peacefully into the arms of Jesus on June 17, 2026.

Born on November 26, 1946, in Putnam, Connecticut, Johanne was raised in South Woodstock, where she developed a lifelong love for family, faith, and serving others. A Licensed Practical Nurse by training, she dedicated her life to caring for others and faithfully served alongside her husband, James Wenger (2025), in pastoral ministry for more than five decades. Through her gifts of music, hospitality, encouragement, and prayer, she quietly touched countless lives.

Johanne is survived by her daughters,

Katherine Wenger Kinnear and her husband, Brian, of Hillsboro, Oregon, and Suzanne Wenger and her husband, Rafael Frutos Fernández, of Madrid, Spain; her grandchildren, Evelyn and Russell Kinnear; and her twin sister, Jennifer Simms of Campbell Hall, New York.

She will be remembered for her gentle spirit, unwavering faith, steadfast prayers, ready smile, and her constant reminder to choose "kind words."

"For to me, to live is Christ and to die is gain." — Philippians 1:21
