Thompson honors its veterans

Courtesy

Doris LaFontaine, Delpha Very and Paul Provost listen intently to the history of the Quilt of Valor Program.

THOMPSON — Nov. 11 at 11 a.m., the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) Thompson Memorial Post 10088 hosted its annual Veterans Day program at Swanson Park in North Grosvenordale.

Guest speaker Fred Ruhlemann, President of the Danielson Veterans Coffeehouse, shared his experiences with The Wall that Heals, the traveling exhibit that was showcased in Putnam in September.

The highlight of the day was the presentation of three Quilts of Valor; these quilts are given to men and women who have been in service to our country. Paul Provost accepted one on behalf of his deceased brother David Provost, who died in service in 1968; Delpha Very accepted one on behalf of her deceased husband, Daniel. John LaFontaine was unable to attend the ceremony; his wife Doris accepted his. These recipients all served during the Vietnam Conflict.

Brian Fitts, Thompson's November Veteran of the Month and a permanently disabled Vietnam Marine veteran, created the quilts; he received a certificate of appreciation from the Kellogg-Atwater Chapter of the National Society Daughters of the Union 15861-1865 for recognizing these veterans with his quilts. Ida Ransom, President of the Auxiliary to the Thompson Memorial Post 10088 laid the commemorative wreath. Following the ceremony, the community was invited to lunch at the VFW Post Home in Quinebaug.

Brooklyn Cares partners with Friends of Assisi for Thanksgiving food basket distribution

BROOKLYN — Brooklyn Cares Community Center is assisting the Friends of Assisi with food baskets for Brooklyn residents!

Brooklyn Cares Community Center opened in September 2023. We have distributed food to Brooklyn residents at no cost twice monthly since opening. We also offer free clothes to anyone from any town in Connecticut, and have had shoppers from 26 Connecticut towns and three other states! In April of 2026, we began a Laundry Love offering for guests who have low to no income. They join us so they can wash their laundry monthly at no cost! We are a 501c3, supported by the Town of Brooklyn, local businesses and many individuals. We are staffed with 100 percent volunteers and are pleased to partner and support our neighbors.

In 2025, we supported more than 500 households and over 1500 individuals. We distributed 4,299 bags of groceries and 28,700 articles of clothing. This was accomplished with about 2500 volunteer hours! In 2026, we are on track to exceed these numbers. We are very proud of what has been created and this year we are building Thanksgiving Food Baskets for the first time! Our neighbors at Friends of Assisi have been doing this for 35 years, and shared all of their great ideas, forms and procedures with us so that we can replicate their successful distribution for the first time!

We are very pleased to be able to work with the Brooklyn Business Association and Brooklyn Public School students, staff and families to collect food items and create baskets! While we are nervous about this huge task, we are very excited to have many helpers!

We would like to invite you to visit us on Monday, Nov. 23 between 1:30 and 3 p.m., when Brooklyn Middle School

BY JASON BLEAU

WOODSTOCK — It's one of the Quiet Corner's longest running holiday traditions, and on Nov. 14, the Woodstock Volunteer Fire Department hosted its 21st annual toy drive, continuing their dedication to helping support local families and provide a magical holiday for children across the region.

Every November, volunteers from the Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association and local schools come together to collect toys to benefit local organizations and communities, helping offset the cost of giving a delightful holiday to children throughout the Quiet Corner. Last year marked its 20th year and things have not slowed down. The crew still sees the drive as one of the most important days on

Senexet Grange holds annual Boot Drive

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

PUTNAM — The Senexet Grange in Woodstock held its annual boot drive on Nov. 7, addressing a key local need by collecting warm socks and winter footwear for community members.

Originally hosted by the Woodstock Democratic Party, the initiative was transferred to the Senexet Grange in 2023 to ensure the effort remained non-political. Since assuming leadership, the organization has expanded the campaign to benefit clients of TEEG, a Thompson-based nonprofit supporting residents across Pomfret, Thompson, and Woodstock.

Danielle Duquette, Vice President of the Senexet Grange, emphasized that the initiative helps local families stay warm without having to choose between purchasing proper footwear and managing other essential living expenses.

"It's essential not just for keeping feet warm, it

Hellstar falls to Fear of God, holds off Newman, knocks off Darrow

WOODSTOCK — Hellstar suffered a tough 98-89 defeat against Fear of God (FL) on Monday night, Nov. 9, dropping its season record to 7-2 in a highly competitive matchup.

Hellstar showed plenty of fight throughout the contest and held the lead in the third quarter, putting itself in position to pull off an important victory. However, missed free throws, defensive breakdowns, and turnovers ultimately proved costly as Fear of God pulled away late to secure the nine-point win.

Offensively, Hellstar had several standout performances. Zack Dawson led the way with 24 points, three rebounds, three assists, and three steals. Jalen Taggart followed closely with 23 points and three rebounds, providing another major scoring threat.

Siy Siaisiai delivered a strong performance inside, recording a double-double with 15 points and 12 rebounds while adding three blocks. Bright Delves contributed 11 points, six assists, and four rebounds in the loss. Hellstar plays next this weekend in Boston in two NEBL games.

Hellstar rebounded by continuing its strong season Saturday, Nov. 13 earning an 82-69 victory over No. 4 Newman School to improve to 8-2 on the year.

Zack Dawson led the way with 21 points and six rebounds, while Jalen Taggart added 17 points and Bright Delves contributed 16 points, five rebounds and five assists as Hellstar put together a balanced offensive performance against the defending Prep School national champions.

Hellstar's offensive production extended well beyond its leading scorers. Ant Pannell finished with nine points and seven rebounds while adding three blocks. Jason Nistrio chipped in seven points and six rebounds in the win.

Siy Siaisiai recorded four points, nine rebounds and three blocks, while Antoine Caughman added four points, eight rebounds and three assists. Isaac Olaniba contributed four points and four rebounds, and Ty Grudzien filled the stat sheet with three rebounds, three assists and three steals.

With the win secured, Hellstar will have little time to celebrate. The team returns to the court Sunday morning in Boston for another challenging matchup against No. 9 Darrow School of New York.

Tipoff is scheduled for 11:50 a.m. as Hellstar looks to build on its 8-2 record and extend its winning momentum.

Hellstar added another impressive victory to its résumé Sunday afternoon, Nov. 14, defeating No. 9 Darrow, 67-54, to improve to 9-2 on the season.

The No. 1-ranked Hellstar squad delivered another strong performance, following up a successful weekend that included victories over the No. 4 and No. 9 teams in the rankings.

Head coach Thomas Espinosa was pleased with the team's performance and the statement it made against two highly ranked opponents.

"We just had a great weekend, knocking off the No. 4 and No. 9 teams. Being No. 1, you always have a target on your back, and opponents always want their best game against you. We showed a lot this weekend and knocked off two really good teams," said Espinosa.

Leading the way against Darrow was Jalen Taggart, who finished with a game-high 19 points and added four steals and a block.

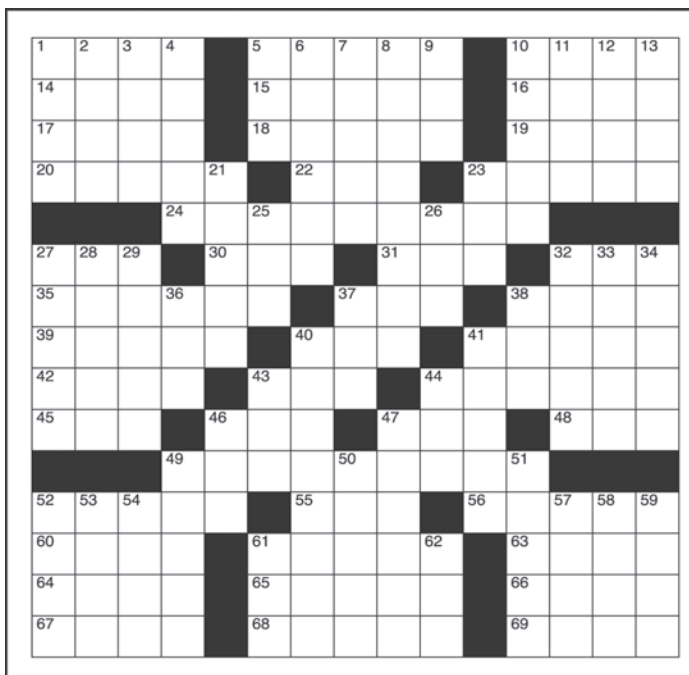

Antoine Caughman, Jr. contributed 12 points and three rebounds, while Siy Siaisiai made his presence felt inside with nine points, eight rebounds and three blocks.

Zack Dawson delivered an all-around performance with eight points, nine rebounds, three assists and three steals. Ant Pannell added six points, five rebounds and two blocks.

Bright Delves chipped in five points and six assists, while Jason Nistrio also scored five points, grabbed five rebounds and recorded two blocks. Ty Grudzien finished with two points, three rebounds and three steals in the win.

With the victory, Hellstar moves to 9-2 and will look to carry its momentum into another busy week in Florida. Hellstar plays Tuesday night against the Cold Hearts in an OTE battle, with an 8 p.m. tipoff. The team will be back on the court Wednesday night against the City Reapers, also scheduled for an 8 p.m. start.

The things worth fixing

CORNER OF KINDNESS

By CHIP

There's an old saying that goes something like this: If it ain't broke, don't fix it. I've always liked that bit of Yankee wisdom, although I've come to believe there's something equally important that ought to go along with it. If something is broken, that doesn't necessarily mean you ought to throw it away.

I was thinking about that recently while looking at a perfectly good household item that had developed one small problem. Nothing serious, mind you. The sort of thing that, 30 or 40 years ago, would have sent a fellow rummaging through a coffee can full of screws, washers and assorted bits of hardware.

These days, the first instinct seems to be to look up the price of a replacement.

Somewhere along the way, we became a society that finds it easier to replace things than repair them. And while I understand the economics of it, I can't help wondering what we've lost in the process.

Growing up in New England, you learned pretty early that most things deserved a second chance. A lawn mower that wouldn't start wasn't necessarily a dead lawn mower. A chair with a loose leg wasn't headed for the dump. And a pair of work boots with worn soles might still have a few good miles left in them.

People fixed things because money was tight, certainly, but there was something more to it. There was pride in knowing how things worked, satisfaction in solving a problem and a healthy reluctance to waste something that still had value.

My father's generation understood that better than most. They weren't necessarily sentimental about their possessions. They were practical. If a repair cost a dollar and a replacement cost 10, the decision didn't require much discussion.

Of course, the world has changed. Plenty of modern products aren't designed to be repaired. Try taking apart a household appliance today and you'll discover screws that require a special tool, plastic pieces that snap when you touch them and electronic components that might as well have come from a spaceship.

I sometimes suspect the manufacturers would prefer that we didn't look inside.

Still, I think the old repair mentality has something to teach us, and not only about appliances.

Consider how quickly we sometimes give up on things that have become inconvenient. A hobby gets difficult, so we abandon it. A friendship grows distant, so we stop calling. A disagreement develops, and rather than work through it, we decide the relationship isn't worth the trouble.

Now, I'm not suggesting that every broken relationship can or should be repaired. Some situations are better left behind. But there are plenty of ordinary misunderstandings that could be settled with a conversation, a little patience and the willingness to admit we might have been wrong.

That last part can be particularly difficult for a stubborn New Englander. I speak from experience.

There's also something to be said for passing along the skills that earlier generations took for granted. Knowing how to sew on a button, sharpen a tool, change a tire or tighten a loose hinge may not seem especially impressive. But those little abilities give a person a certain independence.

And independence has always been a valuable commodity around here.

I think about the older houses scattered throughout Woodstock, Thompson, Pomfret and the surrounding countryside. Many have stood for generations, not because they never needed attention, but because somebody cared enough to keep them standing.

A roof was replaced. A porch was rebuilt. A window was repaired. One generation handed the place to another, along with the understanding that ownership involved responsibility.

There's a lesson in that, too.

Unfortunately, the same philosophy doesn't always extend to the people in our lives. We can spend an entire Saturday trying to get an old snowblower running, yet hesitate to spend 10 minutes making a phone call that might mend a friendship.

Maybe it's because machines are easier to understand than people. A machine generally doesn't hold a grudge. It doesn't remember something foolish you said at Thanksgiving in 1998, either. People are a little more complicated.

As we approach another Thanksgiving, I'm inclined to think that repairing things might be a worthwhile tradition to revive. Not necessarily the broken toaster or the wobbly kitchen chair, although those are good places to start. I'm thinking about the things we sometimes neglect because we're too busy, too proud or too convinced that tomorrow will provide another opportunity.

An overdue apology. A conversation that ended badly. A promise that slipped through the cracks. Even a family tradition that somehow disappeared as everyone got older and busier.

None of those things comes with an instruction manual. There isn't a helpful fellow at the hardware store who can tell you which replacement part to buy.

But most of us have enough experience to know where to begin.

I still believe there are things worth replacing. An unreliable furnace in November comes to mind. So does a smoke detector that has reached the end of its useful life. Common sense ought to have a vote in these matters.

But before we discard something that has served us well, perhaps we should ask whether a little effort might give it another chance.

The older I get, the more I appreciate the satisfaction of making something useful again. There's a quiet pleasure in tightening the final screw, stepping back and realizing that the old thing still has some life left in it.

And when it comes to people, the rewards can be considerably greater.

After all, a repaired chair might last another 10 years. A repaired friendship could last the rest of your life.

That's a pretty good return on a little patience and a willingness to try.

Dunn Marketing moves into new office, launches new Web site, earns Silver Davey Award

KILLINGLY — Dunn Marketing LLC has moved into a larger office at 142 Main St. in Killingly, launched a new website and earned a Silver Davey Award, three milestones that reflect the agency's steady growth into one of northeastern Connecticut's leading marketing firms.

More room for the team, and for clients

The new office sits right downstairs from the agency's former home on Killingly Main Street and offers more than double the space. It gives Dunn Marketing's growing team room to work side by side, along with a larger, more comfortable meeting space that is better equipped for client meetings and working sessions.

"Our team has grown, and the way we work with clients has grown with it," said Laura Dunn, founder, CEO and chief brand strategist of Dunn Marketing. "We wanted a space where a client can sit down with us, spread out and really work through a plan together. Staying on Main Street mattered to us, too. This community is home."

A new dunnmarketing.com

This month, Dunn Marketing also launched a new website at dunnmarketing.com. The site features expanded client case studies and new information on how the agency serves organizations in life services sectors such as healthcare, law, nonprofit organizations, and finance.

"Before someone picks up the phone, they want to know we understand their world," Dunn said. "A behavioral health nonprofit and a wealth management firm have very different audiences and very different rules. The new site shows the work we've done for both, and the results behind it."

Silver Davey Award for Trudeau Center film

Also this month, "60 Years of Transforming Lives & Creating Bright Futures at Trudeau" earned a Silver Davey Award in the 2026 Film/Video Non-Profit category. The film, produced by Dunn Marketing with J. Russo Productions, celebrates six decades of the J. Arthur Trudeau Memorial Center's work with children and adults with developmental disabilities, and the families, staff and community who make it possible. The Davey Awards honor small teams and independent creators producing strong work on limited budgets. Entries are judged by the Academy of Interactive and Visual Arts (AIVA). The 2026 competition drew thousands of entries from boutique agencies, in-house creative teams, small production companies and independent creators.

"Telling a story that meaningful was an honor from the first interview to the final cut," said Marci Seney, PCM®, CDMP, vice president of client services at Dunn Marketing. "Our whole team felt that responsibility in every frame. This award really belongs to the people who let us into their lives and trusted us with their stories."

A growing record of national recognition

The Davey Award is Dunn Marketing's eighth national honor in three years. Earlier in 2026, the agency earned three Communicator Awards of Distinction, also judged by AIVA: one for its brand refresh of The Prue Law Group, P.C., and two for its work with WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors, recognizing a financial services TV commercial series and a white paper.

In 2025, Dunn Marketing received three Communicator Awards. Its Trudeau Center 60th anniversary video earned an Award of Excellence, the program's highest honor, and Trudeau's "We Create Bright Futures" billboard campaign earned an Award of Distinction. A third award recognized the agency's campaign for WHZ.

In 2024, Dunn Marketing's "Serve, Don't Sell" content marketing campaign for WHZ won a Gramercy Institute Financial Content Marketing Award, sharing the Personal Investing, Business-to-Consumer category with Vanguard.

A holiday tradition that delivers more than toys

There are certain traditions that become so deeply rooted in a community that it is difficult to imagine the season without them. In Woodstock and throughout the Quiet Corner, the annual Woodstock Volunteer Fire Department toy drive has earned its place among those traditions.

On Nov. 14, the department hosted its 21st annual toy drive, continuing an effort that has brought holiday happiness to thousands of local children over more than two decades. What began as an opportunity to help families during the Christmas season has grown into one of the region's most meaningful annual charitable efforts.

The numbers tell an impressive story. According to Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association President Russ Downer, the drive has collected more than 50,000 toys and $150,000 in monetary donations over its 21-year history. Perhaps most importantly, those contributions have remained in the local community, benefiting families right here in northeastern Connecticut.

Those figures represent far more than an impressive fundraising accomplishment. Behind every donated toy is a child who will have something special to open during the holidays. Behind every monetary contribution is a family that may find the season a little less financially overwhelming.

And behind the entire effort is a group of people who have made helping their neighbors a priority year after year.

Volunteer firefighters and emergency medical personnel occupy a particularly important place in small communities. They are the people who respond when a house catches fire, when someone suffers a medical emergency or when an accident turns an ordinary day into a frightening one. Their service often requires them to leave their own families, interrupt their work and place themselves in difficult situations for the benefit of someone else. That commitment alone deserves recognition.

Yet the Woodstock volunteers have demonstrated that their understanding of public service extends beyond emergency calls. Through the toy drive, they have created an opportunity to make a difference in circumstances that may never generate a call for assistance but are nevertheless deeply important to the families experiencing them.

Financial hardship does not always announce itself. The family struggling to afford Christmas presents may live next door. The parents trying to stretch their paychecks through December may be the same people encountered at the grocery store, at school functions or at community events. For those households, a little assistance can mean an enormous amount.

There is another particularly encouraging aspect of this tradition: the involvement of local students. Young people who volunteer alongside the firefighters are learning something that cannot be fully taught in a classroom. They are discovering that community service requires time, effort and a willingness to contribute without expecting anything in return. They are also seeing firsthand what happens when people work together toward a common purpose.

Those lessons matter. The students participating today may become tomorrow's firefighters, nonprofit volunteers, community organizers or simply neighbors who recognize when someone needs a helping hand. In that sense, the toy drive is doing more than providing gifts. It is helping preserve the values that allow small communities to remain strong from one generation to the next.

The distribution of the collected toys through TEEG, the Putnam Resource Center and the Eastford school district also illustrates the importance of cooperation among local organizations. No single group can address every need, but partnerships

Opinion and commentary from the Quiet Corner

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Driving the wrong way

To the Editor:

Steve Nickerson's letter in the Nov. 13 issue of the Villager lauding Thompson voters for standing red against the Blue Tsunami reminded me of a joke I once heard.

A man is driving down the highway when his cell phone rings. It's his wife saying "Honey, be careful. I just heard on the radio that there is some idiot driving the wrong way down the highway!"

The husband replies, "It's worse than they said; they're all driving the wrong way."

Now it's up to the Democrats to "Make America Great Again"

To the Editor:

Something that is a concern to us in the Quiet Corner came via a (Nov. 10) report from "MoneyLion" (via Yahoo finance) stating "Social Security Cuts: retirees in these 15 states will lose more than $500 a month in benefits." And guess what state was listed as the number one state to be hit the hardest? Yup, it's Connecticut! This could happen starting in 2033 if nothing is done to prevent it, and haven't we been warned about these pending cuts?

Additionally mentioned was that Social Security isn't running out of money, but its reserves, specifically for the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance (OASI) trust fund, are expected to be depleted by the fourth quarter of 2032. (OASI is funded through payroll taxes paid by workers.) One of its causes is that there are now less working and contributing people. (And why is that?) OASI will not stop making payments, but retirees could see a minimum 22% projected reduction in benefits if Congress doesn't act. The pressure is now on newly elected senators to act on Social Security reform before a predicted drought in the benefits' trust fund by 2032. During an earlier midterm, the democrats campaign sucker bait was that the republicans were going to take away your social security benefits, and now we're relying on the newly elected members of "both parties" to work together and find a solution this pending problem? What could go wrong?

Certainly expected was last week's gloating over the midterm election results. Putting that aside, I enjoyed Steve Nickerson's letter. Yes, conservative values took a nation-wide hit, and I hope that Trump and the Republicans learned a lesson by it. But look on the bright side — there are voters who are now counting on the Democrats to "Make America Great Again." Imagine that — we now have new "MAGA" cult members. All joking aside, but is making America great a bad thing?

Apparently, today's gimme, gimme crowd and the able-bodied welfare deadbeats think that getting a job is a bad thing – or more likely, they think it's up to people like me, Mr. Clark, and every working person who's reading this letter to support them. I always thought that America was the land of opportunity, and it was built off the sweat of its working class. It's that sweat that leads to accomplishment as was evident in Mr. Clark's last letter. And though we're on opposite sides of the fence, we do have something in common — we both have jobs, and we both are the contributors.

At this point, what's done is done. But if you voted for the Democrats solely to keep America the land of your freebies, both you and your opinions are as worthless to me as a cigarette butt or an empty beer can. And if you think I don't know anything about that campaign sucker bait, or about the continual generations of welfare deadbeats, just ask me — do it, please!

Thank you, First Responders of Woodstock

To the Editor:

This past Saturday, the 21st annual Toy Drive took place in the town of Woodstock. I cannot express my sincere appreciation for the efforts of Bungay Fire Brigade, Muddy Brook Fire Department, Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association and Woodstock EMS, to continually volunteer their time and resources to make a difference for our community members.

Knowing that our three departments can come together during a time of need, should make everyone feel great. The passion and empathy exhibited during the Toy Drive was a blessing to be a part of. I would also like to extend a great deal of gratitude and thanks to our community members, who once again stood up and met the challenge of donating many wonderful gifts which our local youths will enjoy this Holiday season. The monetary donations were also amazing to support gifts and other needs which our community members will endure. With elevated prices across the board on everything, it is nice to know that the stress levels of many families in our community will be reduced as a result of the recent Toy Drive here in Woodstock. I continued to be amazed with the outpouring of support the community provides during the Holiday season and throughout the year.

Once again, thank you to Station 75,76, 77 and Woodstock EMS for your efforts in bringing smiles to our youth!

"A Christmas Carol-A Ghost Story of Christmas." Putnam Public Library, Wednesday, Dec. 9, 6-7:15 p.m. Performed in costume and read by Michael Langlois. Be transported to Victorian London and rediscover this most famous of holiday stories. All are welcome.

Thanksgiving is almost upon us so I'm sure "food" is uppermost in many minds, and if you're the chief chef, you're busy stocking up on supplies. Why not pause a minute and reflect on what the inhabitants of this area might have been eating in November about the time of the Revolution. The harvests were in and hopefully the cellars and attics were full of provisions to last until the spring.

I've just read an interesting new book by Ronald W. Collins called "The Colonial Table." He compared not only the probable diet, but also the nutritional value of the available foods throughout the months of the years. Now I must admit, I've periodically thought about what our forefathers ate and what recipes they might have used but have never thought about their nutrition. Every day, we can go to the grocery store or often even a farmers' market for a variety of fresh foods. We are so lucky! I recall my late mother Maud Lyter Markunas (b. 1920) saying what a treat an orange was. They might find one in their stockings on Christmas morn.

Collins compared diets of two families, that of Richard Treat of Wethersfield, in the early 1641-1670 (long before there were white families here in Northeastern Connecticut) and that of General John Stark of Londonderry and Derryfield, New Hampshire, 1758-1770. Since the Stark family was closer in time frame to all the Revolutionary families I've been researching, I was more interested in that. Of course, there were many similar foods. Collins ranked foods according to "frequency of use, reliability across seasons and nutritional or agricultural function. It is not simply weight consumed. Milk, for example, ranks highly because it supplied protein, fat, calcium, and the raw material for butter and cheese." For Wethersfield, the top rank went to Indian corn and cornmeal; Londonderry, it went to potatoes. (I hadn't thought about our 18th century inhabitants eating potatoes---probably my very favorite food---and had not realized that they supplied vital Vitamin C, especially in the months near harvest before they shriveled). Second in Wethersfield was wheat and rye bread and grains; in New Hampshire oats and oatmeal. Third in Wethersfield was pork and pork fat; NH, Milk, butter, cheese and buttermilk. Foods like dry peas and beans, pumpkins and winter squash, cabbage, turnips, onions, and garden roots, eggs and poultry, apples, cider, small beer, nuts, berries, beef and venison (moose in New Hampshire), fish, and maple sugar in New Hampshire appeared in both the lists (p.139). The colonists, of course, had the best nutrition during the months when their gardens were producing a variety of vegetables. February, March, and April were lean months with stores often being rationed to make them last.

A very common food for this Revolutionary time period was a mixture called "pottage." "A pot kept near the fire could combine peas, beans, oatmeal or barley, onions, leeks, cabbage, herbs, roots, and pieces of salted meat. (Notice this probably would have been thicker than a soup). Pottage was efficient because it conserved cooking liquid, softened dried food, accepted leftovers, and could feed many people from one vessel" (p.26). The description made me think of the nursery rhyme, "Pease porridge hot, pease porridge cold, pease porridge in the pot, nine days old…"

The lists made me interested in seeing what I could find out about foodstuffs for local families of the Revolutionary era through inventories. I quickly discovered that some inventories revealed more than others. Some were very disappointing for I could tell little about the family's food. Nevertheless, I did discover a few very interesting entries. One of Killingly's earliest inhabitants Justice Joseph Leavens died in 1773 at age 90. His inventory mentioned a seder (cider) tub, and butter and cheese in addition to several cows and calves of various ages. Killingly's Nell Alexander (Alexander's Lake), a trader, died in 1774. His inventory included no grains but mentioned goats and kids, 4 cows, over fifty sheep and lambs, and nine hogs. That family would probably have had cheese in addition to milk and pork both salted and smoked. Reverend Aaron Brown of Killingly's Middle Society (now Putnam Heights), who died in 1775, owned cattle (number not given) and swine. His inventory included 12 cyder (sic) barrels---does not say if they were full and Indian corn (a staple for bread, etc.). By far the most interesting inventory in my mind was that of Captain Stephen Crosby of Killingly's Thompson Parish. You may recall that he died in September 1776 in New York drinking cold water after a fierce battle. Crosby was in the prime of his life. His inventory was taken November 5, 1776 and included 3 meat barrels,3 seder (sic) tubs, a number of cattle, swine, 120 bushels of Indian corn, 20 bushels of rey (rye), 24 bushels of oats, 2 bushels of wheat, 50 bushels of potatoes, 2 bushels of beans and 35 tons of hay and other fodder.

Washington flips blue: What history says about markets after the midterms

Financial Focus

Jim Zahansky
Investment Adviser

Markets don't like surprises, but that's exactly what they got on Election Day when Democrats decisively won control of Congress and many governors' mansions. In the days since, market volatility has jumped, as investors try to make sense of what lies ahead. A look back at market history is reassuring. On average, the index has risen after midterm elections, no matter which party is in control or if power is divided between Congress and the executive branch.

Undoubtedly, some policies will change as Democrats step into their new roles. Data centers may have a tougher time breaking ground with more Democratic governors, and financial regulations may tighten with Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., heading the Senate Banking Committee next year.

Divided government might also tighten Washington's purse strings. Given the $40 trillion U.S. national debt, less government spending might prove a positive that could result in lower interest rates. Divided government might result in gridlock, where little gets done, which stock investors often consider a positive. Congress has little control over President Donald Trump's actions in Iran or on tariffs.

Regardless of what lies ahead, we'll keep our eye on fundamentals, including earnings, interest rates and valuations. And, as always, we'll help clients remain focused on their long-term investment plans, formulated to withstand good markets and bad, no matter which political party has control.

Democrats go to Washington

The outcome of the midterm elections certainly surprised those in Washington and on Wall Street. While prognosticators were expecting the Democrats to win back control of the House of Representatives, the party's ability to turn the Senate and many governor seats blue came as quite a shock. American voters sent a clear message to their representatives: They're not happy about the country's elevated cost of living.

The outcome has subsequently caused a fair amount of volatility in the stock markets, with the Dow gaining more than 1,569 points the day after the election, followed by an 1,833-point loss the following day. Investors are trying to determine how the election results will affect the economy and markets. And certainly, there will be changes. Democratic governors may make it harder to build new data centers. Warren may push for tighter financial regulations. But in general, a divided government, with Democrats in control of Congress and Republicans in control of the executive branch, may find it tough to get much accomplished.

Those anxiously watching the market's gyrations may be glad to hear that the stock market has fared well regardless of which political party controls Washington. On average, markets have risen under Republicans and under Democrats. The most important thing investors can do is stick with their long-term investing plan, no matter who wields power in Washington. Washington may have flipped from red to blue, but our investment discipline remains unwavering.

Here's a look at what history has to say and what changes may await:

Markets rise over time

The average total return of the S&P 500 is positive both during midterm years and non-midterm years from 1937 through 2025. Non-midterm year returns are slightly higher, 13.3 percent, than midterm year returns, 9.2 percent, but that's primarily because the uncertainty prior to the midterms weighs on the markets.

During midterm years, the average S&P 500 price return from 1982 through 2022 has been slightly negative in each of the year's first three quarters. Those declines are followed by decidedly positive fourth-quarter results, when the S&P 500 rallied by 6.6 percent on average. In the one year following midterm elections, the S&P 500's average return has been 15.4 percent, better than the 7.8 percent return in all other years.

The S&P 500 also rallies when Washington is controlled by Republicans, Democrats or split between the two parties. Looking back to 1947, when Washington is controlled by Republicans, the S&P 500 has rallied on average by 13.3 percent; when Democrats hold the reins, it has rallied 9.3 percent; and when power is divided, the S&P 500 has gained 8.6 percent.

What policies might change?

It may be early days after the election, but markets are already signaling some of the changes that may be coming. Democrats won many governor races on promises to slow data center construction and reevaluate the centers' impact on the environment, water consumption and electricity prices. While the pace of construction may slow, and scrutiny of new projects may increase, we don't expect construction to grind to a halt. Artificial intelligence (AI) is just too important to the United States.

Many technology stocks related to the AI business have fallen sharply amid the uncertainty. While client portfolios undoubtedly include technology investments, we've been very mindful about rebalancing portfolios at regular intervals over the years to help keep portfolios diversified.

Less spending ahead?

Markets often like divided government because it becomes more difficult for either party to increase spending. With the national debt at record levels, less spending would certainly be welcomed by investors in bonds, which have rallied in the days since the election. Lower interest rates should help reduce the cost of home mortgage loans and, if the trend continues, could boost home sales and housing-related stocks.

The current Republican-controlled Congress needs to focus on funding the government before Dec. 11, and it might try to lift the debt ceiling as well before it's reached in late 2027. More likely, the new Congress, which will be sworn in on Jan. 3, will address the debt ceiling later next year.

New Congressional leadership

With the Democrats controlling Congress, new leaders of its various committees will be appointed. One of the most vocal is Warren, who will likely head the Senate Banking Committee and, in the past, has agreed with President Trump that credit card interest rates should be capped.

Under her purview, it's unlikely cryptocurrency legislation will be revived, and the committee could investigate large financial institutions' involvement with private credit. Warren wrote recently in Time magazine that she'd like to use the budget reconciliation process to reverse Republican health care cuts, fund universal child care and cancel Trump administration tax breaks for corporations and high-net-worth individuals.

What Congress can't control

The Democratic-controlled Congress shouldn't have any sway over the Federal Reserve, which is still widely expected to raise interest rates twice over the next year. Nor does it have much control over tariffs, which President Trump has enacted by way of executive order.

Congress's ability to pull the U.S. out of the Iran conflict is also limited, as the president has authority as commander in chief and the general power to conduct U.S. foreign relations and initiate military strikes without a congressional declaration of war. Events in Iran, rather than control of Congress, will have much more of an impact on the direction of oil prices.

While volatility may continue over the upcoming weeks, investors should rest assured that markets have, on average, risen during periods when Congress and the presidency were controlled by different political parties. In the meantime, we'll keep watching the economic fundamentals that drive stocks: earnings, inflation, interest rates and valuations.

New history of Woodstock released

WOODSTOCK — For the first time in 100 years, a new detailed history of Woodstock has been published to commemorate the 340th anniversary of the town. "Woodstock 340: A Collection of Engaging Bits of History and Tradition" is written by local author and historian Charlene Perkins Cutler.

Cutler noted that "At the time Woodstock celebrated its Tercentenary (300th) in 1986, there were about 5,300 people living in the town. Now there are closer to 8,300. When I listen to people at town meetings and public hearings, I realized that newer residents lack knowledge of Woodstock's past and, unfortunately, have no way to access past histories. Most are out of print and do not circulate from local libraries. In my opinion it is difficult to make decisions about Woodstock's future if one does not know about its past. That is why I have written 'Woodstock 340.'"

Cutler's volume is not a typical history book. It is not arranged thematically or chronologically. It is a series of stories, randomly sequenced, about some of Woodstock's history. The author prefers to use the term story, as opposed to chapter.

"Chapters are meant to be read, understood but not designed to be repeated. Stories, true stories like those contained in this volume, are meant to be read, understood, and passed along, retold and kept alive," explains Cutler.

Woodstock 340 contains information and images that have never been published. It is 8.5 x 11, soft bound volume of 266 pages that was professionally designed and printed in full color. There are a total of 240 photos and illustrations (163 color, 77 black & white). The book contains images from 14 well-known museums and archives, as well as those from people in the Woodstock community.

The author is a historian and writer who has worked with historical and cultural resources for more than 45 years. She served as the administrator of Roseland Cottage for seven years and was the president of the Woodstock Historical Society. Cutler was the governor's appointee to the Connecticut State Historic Preservation Commission. After being the executive director of several museums, she began a consulting service focusing on advancing nonprofits throughout New England. Cutler has authored and edited numerous articles, publications, and books. Ms. Cutler was the first executive director of The Last Green Valley National Heritage Corridor, building the organization from its beginning. She ended her professional career as the executive director of the Blackstone River Valley National Heritage Corridor. She has lived in Woodstock and has been learning of its history for 55 years.

Woodstock 340 is available at Echo Farm, 1051 Route 169 in Woodstock, at various library events the town, and through Green Corn Press, greencornpress340@gmail.com.

I was unable to locate an inventory for Israel Putnam but did find one for Colonel William Danielson of Killingly who died August 19, 1798. His estate included 230 pounds of new milk. Perhaps cheese was being made in large quantities for trading. He had 3 bushels of shell beans, 60 bushels of corn, 100 of rye, 16 of wheat, 20 of barley, 20 of oats, and 15 tons of English hay. (All inventories were found at Ancestry.com CT U.S. Wills & Probate 1650-1999). Our residents were fortunate to live near rivers and brooks which could supply fish to supplement the diets. Contact with Providence and Boston also afforded ample opportunities to trade for various spices to enhance the cooking. Still, I'm glad for all our variety in today's grocery stores.

As you prepare for your Thanksgiving celebration, please keep in mind those who might need a little help this year. Friends of Assisi in Danielson will again be distributing baskets. Support them or a food pantry in your town by making a donation of food or money. Many of the grocery stores have containers in which to deposit food. Do not take what we eat for granted! We are blessed to have such abundance. Share your good fortune!

Putnam Legion Post holds annual Veterans Night

PUTNAM — Putnam's Mayotte-Viens American Legion Post 13 held their annual Veterans Night Guest Bartending and Veteran Recognition event at the Black Dog Bar & Grille on Wednesday night, Nov. 11, which was also Veterans Day – a national holiday. The Masters of Ceremony for the event included Post 13 Commander Michael Rocchetti and Linda Colangelo.

The event opened with the beautiful singing of the National Anthem by the most lovely and talented Linda Colangelo. Then Jacob Meyer, an eighth grader and phenomenal young musician from Putnam dazzled the crowd with his psychedelic rendition of the National Anthem, played "Jimi Hendrix style" on an electric guitar. It was a very touching moment – especially for the many Vietnam War veterans in attendance. The room erupted in hearty applause and boisterous cheers as Jacob struck the final note of the anthem on his guitar. After that, the guest bartenders worked the bar collecting tips for the American Legion.

According to Commander Rocchetti, "The Guest Bartenders really brought in a tremendous amount of donations for the Post. This is really important for us because it helps pay for our Hometown Hero publications, scholarships, American Legion Baseball, Boys State, Girls State, the State Police Youth Academy, the youth oratorical contest, our Veterans-in-need fund, and our on-going Americanism initiatives."

Rocchetti also had high praise for the Black Dog including their regular bartenders, cooks and servers, noting, "This is a friendly, happy place! We love it – and we always have fun here. The courteous service, the food and beverages are top notch. The waiters and waitresses were so patient and gracious, and it amazes me how they could skillfully navigate a "standing room only" crowd without dropping anything from the huge serving platters of delicious food and beverages that they were carrying!"

There were five guest bartending teams. Team 1, the O'Brien Group had Kelley Graves, Kiana Barnes, Tyler Dewaele, and Colby Smith. Team #2, the Gates Auto Group, had Craig Gates, Tom Borner, Denny Gates, Chelsea Cormier, Kyle Borner and Nick Truax. Team #3, the Putnam Business Association, had Gary Osbrey, Earl Rosebrooks, Jeff Rawson, and Beth Frost. Team #4, Day Kimball Health Care had Roger Franklin, Jacob Hicks, Crystal Lanning, Dan Durand and Jillian Mancini. Finally Team #5, the Putnam Rotary Club had Martha Paquette and Bob & Adrian Fournier.

Commander Rocchetti also recognized the generosity of the many donors that made the event successful, commenting, "Dozens of gift baskets were donated for the raffle, and some nice auction items were donated by members and friends. Foxwoods Resort and Casino generously donated a voucher for deluxe overnight accommodations for two in a luxury suite."

According to Post 13's Finance Officer Chas Mackenzie, "Between the tips, donations, raffle ticket sales, and auctions, this event raised just over $12,650 for the Post – I am overwhelmed by the generosity of all of the people who made this possible, especially: Craig Gates, Denny Gates, Steve Raheb, Tom Borner, the O'Brien Group, Earl Rosebrooks, Jeff Rawson, Gary & Karen Osbrey, Linda Lemmon, Bob & Adrian Fournier, Patricia George, and many others."

The highlight of the night was when Post 13 honored four local veterans for their military and community service: Roger Franklin, Ronald Pariseau, Steven Raheb and Barbara Smith. The Legion Post also presented a Quilt of Valor to Roger Franklin. The beautiful quilt was skillfully crafted by Maureen Desilets, the wife of our Post Chaplain Pierre Desilets.

Roger Franklin is a longtime member of the American Legion and was honored for his many years of service to the community state and nation, including 30 years as an officer in the US Army Reserve. He served with the XIII Corps and the 76th Training Division where he was responsible for training, mobilizing and preparing US Army Reserve and National Guard personnel for their wartime missions.

Ronald Pariseau, a longtime member of several local veteran organizations was honored for his many years of service to the community, state, and nation including his volunteer service as a US Navy Seabee. Ron served two difficult tours of duty in Vietnam during the Tet Offensive in 1968 and 1969, with Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 11. Recently, he was highly involved in bringing the "Wall That Heals" Vietnam War Memorial to Putnam.

Dr. Steven Raheb, MD, a longtime member of the American Legion, was honored for his many years of service to the community, state, and nation as a Medical Doctor, Professor, and his service in the US Navy Medical Corps as a doctor providing obstetrical, gynecological, and surgical care to US Navy personnel and their dependents.

Barbara Smith, a longtime member of the American Legion Post #13, was honored for her many years of service to the community, state and nation as a school teacher and her US Air Force service as a Recruiter and Administrative Specialist at Edwards Air Force Base, California during the Korean War.

The Post #13 Legionnaire of the Year Award for the 2025/2026 year was belatedly presented to Christopher Steinbrick, a US Navy veteran, for his many years of faithful service to Post #13 as an officer, executive committee member, and as a Color Guard.

Grandmaster Mike Bogdanski, Linda Garcia empower seniors with self-defense seminar at Putnam Municipal Complex

PUTNAM — Seniors from across the community recently gathered at the Putnam Municipal Complex for an engaging and empowering self-defense seminar led by Grandmaster Mike Bogdanski and Linda Garcia. The educational and hands-on program focused on practical strategies that can help older adults stay safe, confident, and prepared in everyday situations.

The seminar emphasized that self-defense begins long before a physical confrontation. Participants learned the importance of situational awareness, recognizing potential threats, and making proactive decisions to avoid dangerous situations whenever possible. Grandmaster Bogdanski and Garcia also discussed techniques for controlling the body's adrenaline response, helping individuals remain calm and think clearly during stressful encounters.

A key focus of the program was teaching effective self-defense techniques specifically adapted for seniors. Rather than relying on strength or athletic ability, the instructors demonstrated practical methods that emphasize leverage, balance, targeting, and simple movements that can be used effectively by people of all ages and physical abilities.

The seminar also highlighted the role of assertiveness and confident body language in reducing the likelihood of becoming a target. Participants practiced verbal and non-verbal communication skills designed to deter potential aggressors and project confidence in public settings.

Adding excitement to the event, several seniors had the opportunity to break wooden boards under the guidance of the instructors. The board-breaking demonstration showcased the effectiveness of proper martial arts technique and gave participants a memorable, hands-on experience that reinforced the power and confidence they had gained throughout the seminar.

"This seminar was about giving seniors practical tools to protect themselves while building confidence and awareness," said Bogdanski. "The board breaking was a fun way to demonstrate that effective self-defense is based on technique and determination, not just strength."

Attendees left the program with valuable safety skills, increased confidence, and a deeper understanding of how awareness, preparation, and assertiveness can help them stay safe in their daily lives.

The successful seminar reflects the ongoing commitment of community leaders and instructors to provide educational programs that promote personal safety, empowerment, and well-being for northeast Connecticut senior residents.

Hometown Heroes of the Quiet Corner

Private 1st Class David Michael Freeman, US Army (1949-1969)

Michael Freeman

Private First Class David Michael Freeman was just 20 years old when he lost his life in the jungles of South Vietnam on Aug. 11, 1969. A native of North Grosvenordale and a resident of Putnam, Freeman served with Company E, 2nd Battalion, 8th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), one of the United States Army's most distinguished combat formations. His death came during a period of intense fighting along the Cambodian border, where American soldiers defended isolated fire support bases against determined North Vietnamese attacks.

David Michael Freeman was born on May 8, 1949, in North Grosvenor Dale, a village in the town of Thompson. He was the son of George Clayton Freeman (1915–1997) and Emma Louise (Gagne) Freeman (1919–1998). Growing up in northeastern Connecticut during the 1950s and 1960s, David belonged to a generation whose young adulthood coincided with America's escalating involvement in the Vietnam War.

Freeman entered the United States Army through the Selective Service System. Following his military training, he was assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), an organization that had pioneered the extensive use of helicopters to transport infantry, artillery, supplies, and wounded soldiers across the difficult terrain of Vietnam.

He began his tour of duty in South Vietnam on Dec. 12, 1968. Assigned to Company E, 2nd Battalion, 8th Cavalry Regiment, Freeman served as an Infantry Operations and Intelligence Specialist. Company E included reconnaissance and combat-support elements responsible for gathering information about enemy movements, conducting patrols, and supporting the battalion's infantry operations. These assignments frequently required soldiers to operate in heavily forested territory where North Vietnamese forces maintained concealed positions, supply routes, and fortified base areas.

By the summer of 1969, Freeman's battalion was operating in Tây Ninh Province, a strategically important region northwest of Saigon. Much of the province formed part of War Zone C, a longstanding enemy sanctuary extending toward the Cambodian border. The region's dense jungles and extensive enemy infiltration routes made it particularly dangerous for American troops.

The 1st Cavalry Division relied upon a network of fire support bases and helicopter landing zones to sustain its operations. These installations were often established in remote clearings, surrounded by defensive wire, bunkers, fighting positions, and artillery emplacements. Although heavily defended, their isolation made them vulnerable to surprise attacks by North Vietnamese infantry and specially trained assault troops.

In August 1969, elements of the 2nd Battalion, 8th Cavalry occupied Landing Zone Becky, a remote fire support base in Tây Ninh Province, approximately 20 miles west of An Lộc and southeast of Katum. Companies D and E participated in the defense of the installation, supported by artillery and other combat elements.

During the night of Aug. 11 & 12, 1969, North Vietnamese forces launched a coordinated attack against LZ Becky. The assault began in the early morning hours with an intense bombardment of 60mm and 82mm mortar rounds, rocket-propelled grenades, and small-arms fire. Under cover of the shelling, enemy assault troops attempted to penetrate the base's defensive perimeter.

The attacking force reportedly included North Vietnamese sappers, specially trained combat engineers who used explosives and other demolition weapons to destroy bunkers, artillery positions, and defensive obstacles. Such attacks were particularly dangerous because they combined indirect fire with close-range assaults against American positions.

The defenders of LZ Becky fought to prevent the enemy from overrunning the installation. American soldiers manned their defensive positions while artillerymen and infantrymen returned fire against the attackers. The principal engagement reportedly lasted approximately 45 minutes, with the main enemy assault broken by about 3:45 a.m.

The fighting inflicted casualties on both sides. Accounts of the engagement report five American soldiers killed and numerous others wounded, while approximately 17 North Vietnamese soldiers were reported killed near the perimeter. Reinforcements from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry were subsequently brought into the landing zone to strengthen its defenses.

Among the American dead was Private First Class David Michael Freeman. His casualty record lists his death as Aug. 11, 1969, in Tây Ninh Province. He suffered fatal multiple fragmentation wounds attributed to hostile action. Because accounts of the battle describe the principal assault as occurring during the early morning of Aug. 12, the precise relationship between Freeman's recorded death date and the timing of the attack remains a matter requiring further examination of the battalion's operational records.

Freeman had been in Vietnam for almost eight months when he was killed, just three months after celebrating his twentieth birthday.

His military decorations included the Bronze Star Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Air Medal, and the Purple Heart. The oak leaf cluster indicates that Freeman received the Bronze Star Medal twice. These decorations were recorded on his government headstone application and are engraved on his grave marker. Although the original award citations have not yet been located, they provide important testimony to his military service. The Purple Heart recognizes the wounds he suffered as a result of enemy action, while his Bronze Star and Air Medal awards reflect additional recognition of his wartime service.

Following his death, Freeman's remains were returned to Connecticut. He was laid to rest in Saint Joseph Cemetery in North Grosvenor Dale, the community where he had been born two decades earlier. His parents, George and Emma Freeman, lived to see their son's sacrifice remembered by subsequent generations.

David Michael Freeman's name is also permanently inscribed on the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., at Panel 19W, Line 1. There, his name stands among those of more than 58,000 American service members who died or remain missing as a result of the Vietnam War.

The circumstances of Freeman's death illustrate the extraordinary dangers faced by American soldiers defending isolated fire support bases in Vietnam. Even behind sandbagged positions and defensive wire, they remained exposed to sudden mortar attacks, rocket fire, and determined enemy assaults. For the infantrymen of the 1st Cavalry Division, there was often little distinction between the dangers encountered on patrol and those faced inside their own defensive perimeter.

Private First Class David Michael Freeman was one of the young men from Connecticut's Quiet Corner who answered his country's call during the Vietnam War and never returned home. His life ended far from the small northeastern Connecticut communities where he had grown up, but his service and sacrifice remain part of their enduring history.

The story of David Michael Freeman will be included in an upcoming edition of the Hometown Heroes book series, 2027 Volume 8, the Vietnam War Edition. If you are a military veteran from Northeastern CT, who served during the years of 1955 through 1975, and would like to have your name and service record included in this book, please contact the author at this email address: alegionpost13@gmail.com.

Friends of Assisi announces 36th annual Thanksgiving Food Drive

DANIELSON — As Thanksgiving approaches, Friends of Assisi Food Pantry is preparing for its 36th annual Thanksgiving Food Drive, inviting residents throughout Northeast Connecticut to help ensure that local families have food on their tables for the holiday.

The annual effort will take place over three days, Nov. 21-23, with donations of traditional Thanksgiving foods, grocery store gift cards and monetary contributions welcomed.

The food drive will begin Saturday, Nov. 21, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and continue Sunday, Nov. 22, from noon to 3 p.m. at the Friends of Assisi Food Pantry, located at 77 Water St. in Danielson.

A third collection opportunity is scheduled for Monday, Nov. 23, from 3 to 5:30 p.m. at St. James Gym.

Organizers have provided a wish list of items needed for the holiday effort, including apples, broth, canned yams, dinner rolls, boxed potatoes, gravy, fresh squash, turnips, pickles, olives and sweet potatoes.

Monetary donations and grocery store gift cards are also welcome, providing additional flexibility in meeting the food pantry's needs.

Now in its 36th year, the Thanksgiving Food Drive offers an opportunity for residents, families, businesses and community organizations to contribute to a longstanding local holiday tradition.

The drive comes at a time of year when families are preparing to gather around their Thanksgiving tables, but when the cost of purchasing ingredients for a holiday meal can present challenges for households already managing everyday expenses.

By contributing even a few items from the organization's wish list, donors can help make the holiday season a little easier for neighbors who need assistance.

In announcing this year's collection, Friends of Assisi expressed gratitude for the community's continued generosity and encouraged residents to participate once again.

The organization hopes to build on the support it has received throughout the years as it prepares for another Thanksgiving season.

Residents interested in contributing are encouraged to bring donations during any of the three scheduled collection periods.

For additional information about the Thanksgiving Food Drive or ways to contribute, contact Friends of Assisi Food Pantry at 860-774-2310 or email directorfoodpantry@gmail.com.

Eastern honors American heroes on Veterans Day

BY KYLE BERSON '26
EASTERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

WILLIMANTIC — Eastern Connecticut State University honored the nearly 20 million United States active and retired military personnel during its annual Veterans Day ceremony on Nov. 11. The event featured remarks from campus dignitaries and a keynote address by Air Force veteran, entrepreneur, and Eastern alumnus Andrew DiSilvestro '11.

Willimantic's First Congregational Church Minister Paul Doyle, pastor at Eastern's Interfaith Campus Ministry, opened the ceremony: "We are who we are (as a nation) due in large part to those who gave their lives in service," he said.

Eastern President Karim Ismaili recognized that the family members of veterans and active service members share in that burden as well: "Service is rarely carried out by one person alone. ... A family shares in the time apart, the uncertainty, the transitions, and the sacrifices that come with that commitment."

Shifting to Eastern specifically, he drew parallels between the purpose of Veterans Day and the goals of higher education.

"Veterans Day asks us to pause and reflect on the meaning of service, and on the sacrifices made by those who have chosen to serve something larger than themselves," said Ismaili. "A university education challenges us to consider not only what we hope to accomplish in our own lives, but what responsibilities we have to one another, and to the communities of which we are a part."

Senior Michael Hemmings, a student leader and Marine recruit, introduced keynote speaker DiSilvestro, an Air Force veteran and CEO of AmeriTech Contracting. He described the 2011 Eastern alum as embodying "calm and confidence in the face of complexity."

"Coming back to this university is special," DiSilvestro began. "Returning on Veterans Day - the opportunity to recognize the men and women who have served this nation - brings a different kind of meaning."

He shared a moving story about a fellow service member and dear friend, Mike, whom DiSilvestro met in 2014 at UConn's Entrepreneurship Bootcamp for Veterans, a transitional resource that helps veterans apply their skills to entrepreneurship and business ownership. DiSilvestro credited him as one of the most driven, resilient veterans he had ever met.

"The desire to serve doesn't end when the uniform comes off," DiSilvestro said. "After his service, Mike dedicated himself to protecting veteran benefits. If you've ever dealt with that system, you know it's not easy."

DiSilvestro described his friend's commitment to helping his fellow veterans fight denied claims, secure proper disability ratings, and navigate systems that often complicate veterans' access to health care and benefits. More importantly, Mike sought to ensure veterans didn't lose their sense of self.

"He wasn't fighting for disability ratings, but for dignity for those who served," said DiSilvestro.

While crusading for his brothers and sisters in arms, Mike struggled with mental health until his death in 2020.

"Sometimes the people fighting the hardest for others are the ones who need some help themselves," said DiSilvestro, noting that mental health struggles remain a prevalent challenge within the veteran community.

"I want his life, commitment, and service to others to define his legacy," he said. "The most meaningful mission you can ever undertake is one that improves the lives of others."

The veteran and CEO concluded with a call to the Eastern community.

"Continue creating opportunities for veterans to grow, lead, serve, and, most importantly, continue building a culture where they know they belong. We never know how much those connections might mean to someone," he said. "Mike's service mattered. His life mattered. His legacy deserves to live on in the actions we take."

Eastern's Veterans Day ceremony also featured a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance and a performance of the National Anthem by Eastern Chamber Singers.

WOODSTOCK — The First Congregational Church of Woodstock has been hosting their Christmas on the Hill fundraiser for well over 50 years. The tradition continues this year—with two components: The indoor/outdoor holiday bazaar on Saturday, Nov. 21, which is preceded by a week-long online auction.

The online auction opens at 5 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 13 and runs online for a full week until 9 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 19. The auction features over 200 items—antiques, collectibles, sporting equipment, and handcrafted artwork, not to mention homemade raspberry and blueberry pies prepared by the baking pastor, Rev. Dr. Kevin Downer! Bidding information can be found on the church website or through https://new.biddingowl.com/COTH.

The Indoor/Outdoor Holiday Bazaar will be held on Saturday, Nov. 21 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"From heirloom and costume jewelry, to unique handcrafted treasures, to new and gently used items for all ages. The Penny Social includes gift cards and merchandise donated by dozens of local vendors and artisans."

During the fair, the kitchen will be serving corn chowder, butternut bisque, and hot chili for lunch. There will be a bake sale with pumpkin rolls and a variety of cookies. Shoppers can select from an array of greens arrangements, porch boxes, and balsam wreaths to prepare for the holidays.

The public is invited to pick up pre-orders and auction items at the bazaar.

"Our signature dish is a delicious ready-to-bake chicken pot pie with homemade cranberry relish. These sell out quickly so pre-order is recommended by Nov. 15," continued Kirk.

"Christmas on the Hill captures the very best of the holiday season: joy, generosity, and community," Pastor Kevin Downer shared. "As a long-standing tradition for many in the region, it offers a chance to gather with neighbors, discover unique gifts, and bring home favorite holiday treats ahead of Thanksgiving. More importantly, it reflects the spirit of giving, with proceeds helping support the church's outreach ministries and local nonprofit partners including TEEG, Community Kitchens of Northeastern Connecticut, CROP Hunger Walk, The Last Green Valley, and Covenant Soup Kitchen."

The First Congregational Church of Woodstock is an Open and Affirming congregation of the United Church of Christ. The church is located at 543 Route 169, Woodstock, just south of the Woodstock Common. allow generosity to reach families throughout the region.

As the holiday season approaches, it is easy to become distracted by shopping lists, crowded schedules and the pressure to make everything perfect. Events such as Woodstock's toy drive offer a welcome reminder that the most meaningful parts of the season have little to do with elaborate decorations or expensive gifts. They have much more to do with recognizing that the happiness of our neighbors matters, too.

Twenty-one years is a remarkable achievement for any volunteer undertaking. Maintaining that commitment through changing economic conditions, busy schedules and the countless demands placed on emergency responders speaks to the dedication of everyone involved.

The Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association, the participating students, the donors and the organizations distributing the toys all deserve recognition for making this tradition possible.

A toy may seem like a small thing. But to a child who might otherwise go without, it can mean the world. And after 21 years, the people behind this remarkable Quiet Corner tradition continue to demonstrate that the spirit of Christmas is measured not by what people receive, but by what they are willing to give.

their annual calendar.

Russ Downer Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association President, talked about the overwhelming success and impact the toy drive has had over the past two-plus decades.

"This has grown into one of the biggest annual toy events in the region. It sets the tone for the rest of the season. In 21 years, we've collected over $150,000 in monetary donations and over 50,000 toys all staying in the local community for those in need," said Downer.

The event is staffed by members of the Association but also employs the help of local school students who volunteer their time to be part of one of the region's most iconic holiday staples. Whether it's their first year or they've been a part of the drive from day one, Downer said everyone understands the magnitude and impact the toy drive has on providing for those in need.

"It means a lot to us to give back and to see these students paying it forward and taking their time to be a part of something like this," said Downer. "As firefighters and EMS workers, we're called during people's worst moments, so this is a nice time for us to give back, and the community always stops by to say high and support us. There's a lot to appreciate here."

The toys will be distributed between TEEG, the Putnam Resource Center, and the Town of Eastford School District to distribute the toys appropriately to local families.

protects against frostbite, it protects against potential nerve damage and wet feet that can cause skin breakdown that leads to wounds that get infected and can be life-threatening. Keeping our community warm and safe this winter is our priority," said Duquette.

Throughout the day on Nov. 7, Grange volunteers gathered outside the Putnam Municipal Complex collecting footwears for all ages and sizes. Duquette noted that community turnout was tremendous.

"In our community, we are very strong in collecting things like coats, scarves, hats, and mittens. It's phenomenal that our community can come together and collect those very important winter essentials, but a gap we still have is boots and socks and, as anyone who has lived through a Connecticut winter knows, that cold can really get you right down to the bone," Duquette said.

Notable contributions included a major donation from Linemaster Switch, which provided boots in every standard size. Several area churches also contributed, while the day opened with a local couple donating a container filled with footwear and socks. All collected items are set to be distributed through TEEG.

Day Kimball Health's Hospice & Palliative Care earns 2025 SHPBest™ "Premier Performer" Caregiver Experience Award

PUTNAM — Hospice & Palliative Care of Northeastern Connecticut, a service division of Day Kimball Health, has been recognized by Strategic Healthcare Programs (SHP) as a "Premier Performer" for achieving an overall caregiver and family experience score that ranked in the top 5 percent of all eligible SHP clients for the 2025 calendar year.

The annual SHPBest™ award program was created to acknowledge hospice providers that consistently provide high-quality service to families and caregivers of patients receiving hospice care. The 2025 award recipients were determined by reviewing and ranking the overall CAHPS Hospice caregiver experience score for more than 1,800 hospice providers. With one of the largest CAHPS Hospice benchmarks in the nation, SHP is in a unique position to identify and recognize organizations that have made the family and caregiver experience a priority and have been rewarded for their efforts with high marks on the CAHPS Hospice survey.

"Providing excellent patient care takes relentless effort, and our SHPBest award winners embody that every year. This program lets us recognize the organizations that never settle, that keep improving the patient and caregiver experience even when they're already performing at a high level. That kind of commitment deserves to be celebrated," said Jason Ballet, President of SHP.

This is the first time Day Kimball Health's hospice program has been recognized by Strategic Healthcare Programs (SHP) as a top 5 percent performer nationally for caregiver experience, an achievement that reflects the compassion and dedication of the hospice team and the experiences of the patients and families it serves.

The recognition builds on a history of strong patient and caregiver experience results. In 2022, the program received a five-star rating from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), which includes measures related to caregiver experience. In 2018, the program also received an Award of Distinction from Fazzi Associates, our CAHPS administrator at the time, recognizing performance among the top 25 percent of hospices nationally.

This latest achievement reflects the collective efforts of the interdisciplinary hospice team, under the leadership of hospice program manager Kim Durand. The team is committed to supporting not only our patients but also their families and caregivers. In recent years, the program has placed an increased emphasis on caregiver support through its bereavement program and the dedicated services of its social workers and chaplains.

Hospice & Palliative Care of Northeastern Connecticut is honored to receive this national recognition, which affirms its commitment to providing compassionate, high-quality hospice care and supporting patients and their loved ones during one of life's most important transitions.

"Every day, I am inspired by the compassion, skill, and tenacity of our hospice team," said Jennifer LeDuc, RN, MSN, executive director, Homecare & Hospice. "For them, this work is more than a job, it is truly a calling, and I could not be prouder of what they have accomplished. Over the past several years, we have worked to expand our hospice and palliative care programs while remaining focused on what matters most: ensuring patients and families feel supported, heard, and cared for during an incredibly important time in their lives. Hospice is not only about providing excellent end-of-life care. It is also about helping people share their stories, preserve their legacies, and write this important chapter of their lives with dignity, meaning, and as much joy as possible."

Liam Wilcox of Woodstock Valley appointed to Nichols College Senior Advisory Council

DUDLEY — Liam Wilcox of Woodstock Valley is one of 14 students appointed by Nichols College President Bill Pieczynski to the 2026-2027 Nichols Senior Advisory Council (NSAC).

The students selected are accomplished seniors who bring a range of experiences, perspectives and contributions to the Nichols community. They will meet monthly with the president and members of the President's Council, serving as an advisory group as the College plans for the future.

"The Nichols Senior Advisory Council is one of the opportunities I look forward to most each year. What makes NSAC particularly valuable is that it gives students a seat at the table while challenging them to think about Nichols beyond their individual experiences," said Pieczynski. "Their perspectives help inform our decisions and strengthen the College. At the same time, we're giving these students a firsthand look at leadership and decision-making. It's a two-way learning experience, and I'm excited to work with this year's cohort."

Upcoming NSAC meetings will include discussions on the College's new initiatives as well as broader trends and issues in higher education. In addition to helping Nichols enhance the overall experience for all members of its community, the meetings are also intended as an opportunity for students to further strengthen their communication and presentation skills, which are critical to career advancement.

Each year, one NSAC member also has the opportunity to be selected to serve a two-year term on the Nichols College Board of Trustees following graduation, providing an important continuation of student leadership at the College's highest level of governance.
