Putnam Science Academy alumni make their mark in 2026 March Madness

PUTNAM — As the excitement builds for the 2026 NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Tournament, the influence of Putnam Science Academy continues to shine on college basketball's biggest stage. The Mustangs' nationally recognized program will be represented throughout the tournament by a number of former players and coaches who helped build the academy's championship tradition.

Among the coaching ranks, former PSA standout Mamadou Diarra is currently on the staff of the UConn Huskies men's basketball. Another familiar face from the Mustangs' sidelines, Shane Doyle—who helped guide Putnam Science Academy to the 2018 national prep championship—now serves on the staff of the Hofstra Pride men's basketball.

Several former PSA players will also take the floor during the tournament. Barry Evans, a member of the PSA Class of 2022, was part of the historic 38-0 undefeated national championship team at Putnam Science Academy. Evans is a senior wing for VCU. His team remains one of the most dominant powerhouse. Another former Mustang, Jaeden Roberts (Class of 2024), is now a guard for the Hofstra Pride men's basketball. Roberts was part of last year's national championship team at Putnam Science Academy and continues to carry that winning experience into the college game.

From coaching staffs to starting lineups, the fingerprints of Putnam Science Academy can be found throughout this year's March Madness field. The continued success of these former Mustangs highlights the academy's role as one of the premier prep basketball programs in the country.

With so many alumni competing on college basketball's biggest stage, it promises to be an exciting tournament. The entire Putnam Science Academy community will be watching closely and wishing all of its former players and coaches the best of luck as they chase a national championship.

Mo Dioubate, who played at PSA before graduating in 2023, is now competing for the Kentucky Wildcats men's basketball. During his time at Putnam Science, Dioubate helped the Mustangs secure back-to-back national prep championships in 2022 and 2023, cementing the program's reputation as a national

Pomfret's Leah Pollard nominated for State Superior Court

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

P O M F R E T — Connecticut Gov. Ned Lamont has announced the latest nominations for judges to serve the Connecticut Superior Court, including one local making history as the first judicial nomination from Windham County in over a decade.

On March 10, Lamont announced 14 nominees to fill 20 vacancies within the state's Superior Court. Among them is Leah Pollard of Pomfret, who previously served 17 years as probate judge for the Northeast Probate Court and administrative judge for the Northeast Regional Children's Probate Court.

Pollard is a UConn graduate who earned her Juris Doctorate degree from the University of Colorado and currently serves as an attorney with Connecticut Legal Services. She becomes the first nominee for the State Superior Court out of Windham County in 15 years.

Lamont released a statement about the importance of picking the proper personnel to serve the state's court system.

"This class of nominees have the qualifications and meet the high standards the people of Connecticut deserve on the bench," Lamont said. "I am proud that our administration has a record of selecting nominees who've expanded the diversity, backgrounds, and professional experiences of those who serve our court system."

Pollard's nomination drew praise from state lawmakers, specifically Senator Mae Flexer and State Representative Pat Boyd who released a joint statement praising the Pollard's capabilities and service to her county, especially the Quiet Corner.

"We're grateful for Gov. Lamont's leadership in recognizing that the absence of more judges from our corner of the state does a disservice to the residents of Northeastern Connecticut," said Flexer, who also serves as Senate Vice-Chair of the Judiciary Committee. "Leah's experience in the probate courts is going to serve her well as a Superior Court judge."

"I am thrilled Leah Pollard was nominated by Gov. Lamont for the Connecticut Superior

VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

KILLINGLY — The Killingly Town Council will be short one member as Democrat Jim Rivers has announced his departure effective March 11.

The Killingly Democratic Town Committee posted a printed notice, with an acknowledged receipt by the Town Manager's office of March 5, confirming Rivers' resignation. His departure was official as of the Town Council's March 11 meeting. Rivers was elected to the Council last year as part of a Democratic slate that dominated the municipal election. He also currently serves as the Executive Director of the Northeastern Connecticut Council of Governments. This role, along with other commitments, appears to be the driving force behind his resignation.

"At this time, I have personal and professional commitments that have substantially increased since I expressed interest in running for election last spring," wrote Rivers. "I cannot continue to devote the time that this position requires to properly serve the good citizens of Killingly."

Rivers, who won his seat with 1,325 votes, the second most votes in last year's Town Council race topped by only Republic John Cesolini and Democrat

Enrollment openings available at ACT Performing Arts Magnet High School for 2026-2027

WILLIMANTIC — EASTCONN's Arts at the Capitol Theater (ACT) magnet high school has a limited number of seats available for Fall 2026 enrollment. Academically motivated students in grades 9-12 from across eastern Connecticut are encouraged to apply for this distinctive opportunity to pursue intensive study in the performing arts. The school's recent string of achievements in film, creative writing, and other artistic disciplines demonstrates its commitment to nurturing exceptional young talent.

Located in the historic Capitol Theater in downtown Willimantic, ACT offers a NEASC-accredited program that weaves rigorous academics together with immersive, professional-level arts education. Students learn from both certified academic teachers and working professional artists in an intimate, collaborative setting — with an average of just 35 students per grade.

“ACT students don't just study the arts — they practice them at a professional level while they're still in high school,” said ACT principal Sarah Mallory. “When a student wins a film festival award, publishes a university literary journal, or steps onto a real stage in a 1920s-era theater, that's not a simulation of real life. That's the real thing. We're proud to offer that kind of experience to students from across eastern Connecticut.”

ACT students choose from seven specialized arts pathways: Acting, Creative Writing, Dance, Integrated Arts & Management, Media Arts, Music, and Technical Theater (sets, lighting and costuming). The school's distinctive facility provides daily access to professional-grade resources, including a fully equipped theater, scene shop, modern audio/video editing suites, spacious dance studios, and a comprehensive costume shop — enabling students to produce work of genuine professional quality.

That quality shows in results. ACT students regularly earn recognition in prestigious competitions and venues, including Young Writers publications, Scholastic's Art & Writing Awards, DMV-Travelers' Teen Safe Driving Video Contest, and the Quiet Corner Film Festival. Student work has appeared in university publications and public performances, giving ACT graduates a portfolio of real-world experience before they leave high school.

Through an ongoing partnership with Eastern Connecticut State University (ECSU), eligible upperclassmen can earn free credits by taking university courses while completing their ACT education. The partnership also connects students to ECSU's literary festivals and cultural events, deepening their engagement with the broader arts community.

Prospective students can still apply at www.eastconn.org/act. Limited seats are still available; the application process should be completed as soon as possible.

EASTCONN, ACT's administering organization, is a public, non-profit Regional Educational Service Center that has served northeastern Connecticut's educational needs since 1980. Learn more at www.eastconn.org.

Local author to speak about son's death by suicide

DAYVILLE — Marie Lisette Rimer, author of “Back From Suicide,” will speak on Wednesday, March 25, 2026, at United Services, 1007 North Main St., Dayville, from 6-8 p.m. Rimer is an educator and mother whose son Patrick succumbed to suicide. After his death, Lisette sought to understand why her son, a brilliant and successful young man, nevertheless struggled with the depression that would lead to his death. Her book, “Back From Suicide,” was published in 2024.

Ms. Rimer received a BA in Sociology and an MA in Secondary Education at the University of Connecticut. She was a publicist for the Connecticut legislature and an award-winning English teacher at Rectory School in Pomfret, Connecticut. The joy of three children and country living was shattered by the suicide of her youngest son, Patrick Wood. Patrick was his class valedictorian and AP Scholar, and graduated from Stanford University. Lisette explores the seeming contradiction between the promises of his young life and the grip of depression that overtook him.

“‘Back from Suicide’ is brilliant and beautifully written. Lisette made me feel as if I were walking with her through Berlin with Patrick's friends. She proves that children who have it all are vulnerable to mental illness,” says Dr. Lee Hausner, “Children of Paradise: Successful Parenting for Prosperous Families,” former senior psychologist, Beverly Hills Unified School District.

This free presentation, open to the public, is sponsored by NAMI Windham County, and affiliate of the National alliance on Mental Illness. NAMI Windham County provides support, education and advocacy throughout Windham County on behalf of individuals and families affected by mental illness.

A short meeting of NAMI Windham County members will precede the presentation at 5:45. Light refreshments will be provided. Pre-registration is requested by email at info@namiwindhamct.org.

11th Annual open sing in the spirit of Pete Seeger coming to FCC Woodstock

WOODSTOCK — The eleventh annual tribute concert dedicated to the memory of folk icon, Pete Seeger is scheduled for Sunday, March 22 at 4 p.m. at the First Congregational Church, Route 169, Woodstock Hill. Tickets are available at the door for a donation of $25.

The event, affectionately called “For Pete's Sake,” is hosted by former State Troubadour Sally Rogers of Pomfret, and Leslie Sweetnam of Woodstock, joined by a host of area song leaders who will present the songs while lyrics are projected for all to join in, including Bill Harley, Sally Rogers, Howie Bursen, Jeff Perkins, Sandy Pliskin, Marilyn Ravina, Carol Rossetti, Carolyn Brodginzky, Maria Sangiolo, Hugh Blumenfeld, and Leslie Sweetnam.

Seeger was one of the folk singers responsible for popularizing the spiritual “We Shall Overcome” that became the acknowledged anthem of the American Civil Rights Movement in the 1960s. Even more than a performer, Pete was a skilled song-leader, teaching generations of Americans to add their voices to make a room rock with that sound. Our song leaders will teach each song, many already familiar, so we can sing along, and all words are projected on a large screen.

Seeger is best remembered for touring with two groups, the Almanac Singers and the Weavers in the 1940s and 1950s, and is credited for leading folk music's revival and survival in the 1960s.

He had a string of hit records during the early 1950s as a member of the Weavers, most notably their recording of Lead Belly's “Goodnight, Irene,” which topped the charts for 13 weeks in 1950.

Other hits written by Seeger, some recorded by other artists, include “Where Have All the Flowers Gone?”; “If I Had a Hammer”; and “Turn, Turn, Turn.” He also popularized Woody Guthrie's “This Land is Your Land.” Many of these will be performed (with audience participation!) at the March 22 concert.

Seeger was a prominent singer of protest music in support of international disarmament, civil rights, counterculture, and environmental causes. As a social activist, he supported progressive causes such as racial and religious inclusion which influenced his work.

A fact not well known about Seeger is that he was a U.S. Army veteran, having served in the Pacific during World War II. He was trained as an aircraft mechanic but later assigned to Special Services where he entertained his fellow troops with his banjo and songs.

After the war, he worked on the Civil Rights History Project at the Library of Congress, which no doubt influenced his songwriting and social activism.

Admission is a $25 donation per person to benefit the Community Kitchens of NE Connecticut which have fed hundreds (if not thousands!) of hungry local people here in the Quiet Corner, especially active during the COVID Crisis. Hot delicious meals are prepared by volunteers and are still being served at their locations in Woodstock, Central Village, Danielson, Thompson. To volunteer or to find out about their serving times and locations, contact: communitykitchensnect@gmail.com or call them at 860-779-2465.

A long-awaited seat at the table

For many residents of Northeastern Connecticut, it can sometimes feel as though decisions are made elsewhere, by people who may not fully understand the character, challenges, and strengths of this region. That is why the recent nomination of Leah Pollard of Pomfret to the Connecticut Superior Court carries significance that goes well beyond one individual's career milestone.

If confirmed, Pollard would become the first Superior Court judge from Windham County in 15 years. That fact alone speaks volumes.

Representation matters in ways that are not always obvious at first glance. Courts are tasked with interpreting laws that affect every corner of the state, yet the lived experiences of those who serve on the bench inevitably shape how they approach their work. A judge who has spent years serving families in probate court here in Northeast Connecticut brings with her a familiarity with the rhythms of rural communities, the realities facing working families, and the unique challenges that come with limited access to services.

Pollard's background reflects that kind of grounded experience. Seventeen years as a probate judge is not a brief stop along a career path. It is a sustained commitment to helping families through some of life's most difficult and personal moments, from estate matters to guardianships and children's cases. That kind of work demands patience, empathy, and a steady hand, qualities that translate well to the broader responsibilities of the Superior Court.

Her nomination also highlights something that local leaders have pointed out for years. When entire regions go unrepresented in key areas of state government, it can create an imbalance, even if unintended. Windham County has long been proud of its independence and resilience, but it should not be overlooked.

This moment suggests a recognition, at least in part, that the Quiet Corner deserves a stronger voice in statewide institutions.

It is also worth noting that Pollard's career has been rooted not only in the courtroom, but in public service. Her work with Connecticut Legal Services reflects a commitment to access and fairness, particularly for those who might otherwise struggle to navigate the legal system. In a time when confidence in institutions can feel strained, that kind of background is meaningful.

Of course, a nomination is only the first step. The General Assembly will now take up the responsibility of reviewing and, ultimately, deciding whether to confirm Pollard and the other candidates put forward. That process is important and should be thorough. The standards for a Superior Court judge are high, as they should be.

But for residents of this region, there is already something to take note of. After years without representation at this level, Northeastern Connecticut is once again part of the conversation.

That matters.

It matters for young people considering careers in law who can now see someone from their own communities reaching this level. It matters for residents who want to feel that their region is understood, not simply from a distance, but from lived experience. And it matters for the broader idea that every part of the state, from its cities to its most rural towns, has a place in shaping the institutions that serve us all.

There is a quiet pride that runs through towns like Pomfret, Putnam, Thompson, and Killingly. It is not loud or boastful, but it is steady. Moments like this bring that pride a little closer to the surface.

The coming weeks will determine the outcome of this nomination. Regardless of the final vote, the message is already clear. Northeastern Connecticut is not on the sidelines. It belongs at the table.

How can we prevent the construction of an ICE facility here?

To the Editor:

How can we in Northeast Connecticut prevent, or at least forestall, the placement of an ICE detention complex in our community?

Worries about the building or repurposing of warehouses to "house" those detained by the Department of Homeland Security are legitimate, far reaching and, once initiated, difficult to stop. The costs to small communities such as ours can be devastating on many levels and pragmatically in terms of energy, water and sewage usage far exceeding what is available to the existing population. In some instances, the proposed number of detainees in the facility is larger than the number of people in the community in which it is placed. It would be lovely to be able to predictably say "could never happen here" but devastating to then find, without having taken preventative action, a facility is being built or a warehouse transformed in one of our towns.

I don't have an answer to the initial question of how to prevent such a thing from happening.

I do know that many communities across the country have taken action, passing ordinances, or other regulations that would inhibit ICE from taking advantage of a fairly rural community. It is reported that Connecticut legislators are proposing legislation that would allow towns and cities to block the re-purposing of commercial warehouses for housing immigrants being detained by the federal government. The legislation, raised by the Planning and Development Committee this month, would require municipal approval for converting a commercial warehouse into a detention center that would house any individual for more than 24 hours. If passed, would one or all of our 10 towns demand or grant such approval? The time to stay informed, talk with each other and our town governments is definitely now.

Woodstock budget '27

To the Editor:

Buckle up, folks, as this is going to get interesting. On Tuesday, March 10, the Woodstock Board of Finance (BOF) held its budget review meeting – would seem to be the only one to be held prior to the public hearing on March 24. Attendance was low, especially on Zoom as the link in the agenda didn't work – you had to go to the link in the previous agenda or type in the address to connect, so I only saw two people, including myself, who were not official participants on the Zoom side.

When they got to the budget reviews, First Selectman Chan Paquette kicked it off with warning that it was going to be a tough year for taxpayers and so the Board of Selectmen was tough on budget proposals. Town Government side, which accounts for roughly 21 percent of the budget, is proposing a $181,695 increase – 2.77 percent. And then came the BOE – after a lengthy introduction of all the reasons why it was going to be a doozy, came the number a $1,174,023 increase. The public didn't get to see the actual "10" account numbers but the Superintendent did go through some of the major ones – those in attendance may have had access to a paper copy. Woodstock Academy tuition is down a couple of hundred thousand with overall tuitions down more than $46,000; so WPS spending up more than $1.2million. Actual enrollment is a question as two of the slides on the issue didn't match up. There were no substantive questions from the BOF. Now we get to the fun part: as most Woodstock residents know we went through a reevaluation this past year so reference points can get a little tricky. Karen Fitzpatrick, Finance Director, summed it up at the end of the meeting this way: the reevaluation saw an average increase of 30 percent and with that the needed mil rate to cover the proposed budget will be 20.62 mils. Now, a 30 percent increase in evaluations should lower the mil rate from 24.4 mils to 18.77 mils meaning the average taxpayer would be looking at a 9.9 percent tax increase. If you were one of the unfortunates who saw an assessment increase greater than 30 percent, well, your taxes go up from there. Now remember this is on top of, compounded to, 24 percent in increases over the last four years. It just keeps getting better. Watch the video when it gets posted and don't choke on the popcorn.

Time to start paying attention, show up and ask questions, and above all show up and vote. The public hearing is on March 24, the Annual Town Meeting on April 21, and the town referendum will be held on April 28. Good Luck.

Walt's Power Equipment – a farewell to a local legend

To the Editor:

If you ever owned a gas-powered lawn or garden tool, chances are you knew Walt's Power Equipment. For nearly 40 years, Walt served Pomfret and the surrounding towns with skill, honesty, and a quick wit. He could fix just about anything, and if you couldn't bring it in, he'd pick it up himself.

I always enjoyed stopping by the shop—not just for repairs, but for conversation. Sometimes it was just Walt; other times, his business partner Jeff was there, along with a couple of regulars who would wander in. The talk flowed easily, from work being done to what was happening around town or in the wider world. Walt always made me laugh when he'd look at me with that grin and ask, "What have you done now?" He always had good advice about what equipment to buy—and what to stay far away from.

Time finally caught up with old Walt. Last summer, with some encouragement from his children, he decided to hang up his tools and close the shop. I'd been planning to write something about the place when I learned that Walt had passed away just a few days after I started writing. He died on March 9, 2026.

Walt served his country proudly—first in the Army, then in the Navy as an aircraft mechanic. He brought those same skills, precision, and pride to his work after opening his shop in 1987. More than that, he brought kindness, laughter, and a sense of community that will be deeply missed.

We'll miss you, Walt. You fixed more than our machines—you brightened our days.

The gentle art of letting someone go first

There are small moments in a day that don't seem like much at the time. They pass by quickly, barely noticed, and yet they say something about who we are, and maybe even who we're trying to be.

I've been thinking lately about something as simple as letting someone go first.

Not in any grand, heroic sense. Just the everyday kind. The car at the four-way stop in Woodstock where no one's quite sure whose turn it is. The line at the coffee counter in Putnam where someone's only grabbing one item. The narrow aisle in a store where two carts can't quite pass without a little negotiation.

You see it all the time. Or maybe more accurately, you notice when you don't.

There was a morning not long ago, over in Killingly, where traffic had that slow, steady feel to it. Not quite a rush, but enough that everyone seemed a little focused on getting where they needed to be. I was coming up on an intersection where another driver was waiting to pull out. He had that look. You know the one. Hoping for a break but not quite expecting it.

I had the right of way. Could have kept going without a second thought.

Instead, I slowed and waved him through.

He hesitated for a second, then went, and gave that small, grateful wave in return. Nothing dramatic. Just a simple acknowledgment between two people who don't know each other and likely never will.

And yet, for a moment, the day felt a little different.

It struck me afterward how often those moments present themselves. Not just on the road, but everywhere. Little chances to ease someone else's way, even if only by a few seconds.

Letting someone go ahead in line. Holding a door a beat longer than necessary. Pausing a conversation so someone else can speak. None of it costs much. A moment here, a moment there.

But I wonder how often we rush past those chances.

We live in a time that places a high value on efficiency. Getting things done quickly. Moving along. Staying on schedule. And there's nothing wrong with that, of course. We all have places to be.

Still, there's something to be said for the quiet decision to step aside, even briefly, and let someone else have the space.

It's not about losing something. It's about choosing not to hold on quite so tightly to every second.

I think people notice it more than we realize. Not in a way that leads to applause or recognition, but in that small shift in expression. The slight softening. The look that says, "That helped."

And here's the part that interests me most. Those moments tend to ripple.

The person who was let into traffic may be more likely to do the same a mile down the road. The one who was waved ahead in line might hold the door for the next person. It's not guaranteed, of course, but it happens often enough to matter.

Kindness, especially this quiet, everyday kind, has a way of moving along.

I'll admit, I don't always get it right. There are days when I'm too focused, too distracted, or maybe a little too impatient. Days when I take my turn and keep going without thinking much about it.

But when I do remember, when I take that extra second, I've noticed something.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'All the news that's fit to print' – 2026 version!

To the Editor:

Yesterday, I bought a newspaper! The 'Old Gray Lady,' as a matter of fact, The New York Times.

Honestly, I cannot remember the last time I dropped a few coins on the counter to buy one, and my curiosity was only enhanced by the fact that it cost me $4 for the trouble! Four dollars for a copy of the Times — not the Sunday Times, mind you, but just a Thursday copy. When did that happen?

Anyway, I was at the store, picking up a gallon of milk (which was cheaper than the paper by the way!) and I saw the rack of papers. I thought, what the hell, let me see what the eggheads at the Times think is going on in the world.

You see, I quite literally grew up in a world wallpapered in Print media. Newspapering was my first job as a boy, and my first real 40 hour a week job as a teenager. I delivered the Boston Globe along with my four brothers in our Franklin Ma. neighborhood in the late sixties and then started my working career at The Middlesex News in Framingham in the mid-'70's. I spent the next thirty years or so, working in some facet of newspaper production, printing or distribution and enjoyed a lucrative career doing so. Newspapers, during that time, were at their apex, both in size and volume, as well as importance in the greater culture. It was a matter of perfect timing for me. Specifically within the 'production arena' of newspapering, technology was having an enormous impact, and I was a bright eyed and eager participant in that 'revolution'. The methods used in producing daily papers was changing so rapidly that we who got in at a young age, were presented with countless opportunity to ride that wave and benefit from its cresting. Ironically, eventually it was that same technological momentum that eventually basically killed off the golden goose, but that is a whole other story.

It was another stroke of luck that I happen to be a voracious reader at that time as well. I would read at least a couple of daily newspapers every day. In those days, a lot of people read the paper daily, but being that I worked in Newspaper printing plants, I had no shortage at all of reading materials to pore through, and I read them all! Additionally, the upward momentum of my career, my production 'expertise' carried me quite literally all over the world, working in and consulting at major newspapers in cities all over this country and in Europe. I practiced my understanding of Spanish reading copies of "El Diario Vasco" in San Sebastian Spain, and looked at the pictures and found 'English language' copies of Newspapers in Sweden and other European countries. I was it seems, addicted to the ink on those pages and completely immersed in that addiction every day.

So picking up that copy of the 'Old Gray

Lady' seemed almost necessary yesterday when I noticed it on the shelf. I did some work in fact for the Times, for the Globe, and was right in the thick of the great color revolution initiated by USA Today in the late 80's. Newspapers had been putting bread on my table for all of my life.

This morning, I sat down with my breakfast and spread the paper out before me on the table. Imagine my disappointment as I flipped through all 54 pages and did not see one single story or article that caught my eye and enticed my interest. All those years ago, I read everything in the paper, cover to cover. In fact today, the only thing that even remotely tempted me was the crossword puzzle but at this point I was so cynically jaded I figured that it too would simply be more of the same useless pablum that I had found on every other page.

The word 'Trump' was ever-present, even in the sports section. Every article was political in nature and delivery, and every one held the same doom and gloom posture. The arts section simply baffled me, I did not recognize anything in it. The fashion pages seemed silly, but to be fair, that was true even 50 years ago when I would smirk thumbing through them, I mean, who actually wears this stuff, anyway?

Newspapers, of course, were always highly political, and in my youthful idealistic days, I ate it up and still hungered for more. There was however in those days at least some effort, often very good and sincere efforts, to provide a point v. counter-point of reading, and I always read both sides. We don't have that luxury anymore, just one voice screaming at us about how everything is bad, and everything we might believe in is wrong. It is at the least boring and at worst, depressing.

I can't get that four dollars back, but I suppose it was not a complete waste.

At the very least, the four dollars bought me a nostalgic reminder of when things were much better, when people were much smarter, and each day's edition at least offered some hope we might think our way out of all that ails us.

Those were good times, and we were lucky to have them.

CHARLES F. HARRINGTON
POMFRET CENTER

There is a right way to do things, a wrong way, and Trump's way

To the Editor:

I would like to raise some points regarding Mr. Jay Gerhart's letter in the March 13 issue of the Villager.

First, I want to say that I agree with Mr. Gerhart that there is good reason for a regime change in Iran. What he says about the U.S. being instrumental in installing the corrupt government of the Shah in order to prevent the people of Iran from directing their government according to their wishes is absolutely correct. That led to the revolt that allowed the religious Ayatollahs to take control and, with dictatorial powers, suppress the rights of women, the rights of free speech, and the rights of the people of Iran to freely elect the government of the people's will.

But is this war the right way to go about it? There is no question that the Iranian government was killing thousands of protestors, which is a pure violation of human rights. But is that what Trump is truly interested in? If the case was to be made that the Ayatollahs were violating the civil and human rights of the citizens of Iran, or that Iran's nuclear program was indeed a threat to global peace, should this case not have been brought to the United Nations? To NATO? To Congress? To the American People?

None of this was done. Oh yes, Trump did some chest pounding and saber rattling, but did he make his case? He did not. He unilaterally, along with Netanyahu began a Pearl Harbor like bombing raid in Iran that destroyed some military bases, cities, and at least one girl's school with hundreds of victims. He did not discuss this with Congress, which the Constitution requires. He did not discuss this with the international community, which at least Bush did do in going back to Iraq. He did not warn Iran's neighbors so they could be on the alert for retaliation. He did not even warn our own citizens in the region to leave before the battle started. Instead, he told them afterwards that they were on their own to get out once the bombs started falling.

Trump had no plan going in, no end plan, and no specific goal. Or did he? Much like his attack on Venezuela where he kidnapped the president but left the same people in power, he wanted, and took, their oil. Is this his same plan for Iran? We don't know, because he hasn't told us why we are there, other than a nuclear threat that he supposedly ended in his bombing raids several months ago when he told us their ability to make bombs was completely destroyed. Which time was he lying? (That's a rhetorical question.) Trump now says the war will end when he feels it in his gut. What is that supposed to mean?

Trump says that any new leader in Iran must meet with his approval. Not the approval of the international community, not the approval of Congress, not the approval of the United Nations, not even the approval of the people of Iran, but his approval. Trump's family has already increased their personal wealth thanks to this war, how much more will they gain with his approval of a new leader?

Trump, who did not discuss this attack with any other country, except Israel, is now literally begging for help to get ships through the Strait of Hormuz, and he is getting turned down by them. Meanwhile, North Korea, Russia and China are watching as the U.S. depletes its military arsenal, and the Kurds are saying they are ready to move in and take over Iran. So replace one religious dictatorship with another.

In the meantime, prices of everything are going up, due mostly to the cost of oil going up. Yes, Mr. Gerhart, I agree that there is good cause to change the regime in Iran, but there is a right way to do things, a wrong way to do things, and the Trump way to do things.

The day seems to slow down, just a touch. Not in a way that throws everything off, but in a way that makes things feel a little more human.

And in places like Northeastern Connecticut, where life still has room for that kind of pace, it feels like something worth protecting.

So the next time you find yourself at that four-way stop, or in that line, or facing that small, everyday decision, you might try it.

Let someone go first.

It won't change the whole world. But for a moment or two, it might change the tone of the day.

And sometimes, that's more than enough.

Traditionally, Town Council vacancies are filled by candidates that represent the same constituency as the department candidate. In this case, Rivers was an at-large member of the Town Council representing Killingly as a whole rather than a specific district.

While candidates are also often members of the same political party as the departing member, Killingly’s Town Charter, dated 2019, does not specify any requirement for political alignment. Any candidate considered for the vacancy is subject to interviews by the Town Council at large and must receive a majority vote of support to be installed.

As women’s wealth grows, financial confidence must too

If you’re a woman who’s ever felt intimidated by investing or uncertain about your financial future, you’re not alone. But it’s time for that to change. Women are set to inherit the majority of the upcoming $84 trillion “Great Wealth Transfer” happening over the next decade. That means now is a crucial time for women to get comfortable with managing – and building – wealth.

The confidence gap is real – but it’s not about ability

Recent research reveals a striking disparity in financial confidence between men and women. A January 2026 NerdWallet survey found that 65 percent of men believe they can handle income loss this year. In contrast, only 46 percent of women feel the same way.

This gap isn’t about capability, though. It’s about confidence. Studies consistently show that when women do invest, they often outperform their male counterparts.

Women’s financial power is growing

The statistics tell an encouraging story about women’s growing financial power. Women control more than $10 trillion in U.S. household financial assets, expected to reach $34 trillion by 2030.1 More women are investing than ever before, with 71 percent now participating in the stock market.2

Despite these gains, 82 percent of women want more financial information.3 Many feel less knowledgeable about long-term topics like building wealth and managing investments.

Understanding the unique challenges

Women face distinct financial challenges that require thoughtful planning. The gender pay gap persists, with women earning approximately 85 percent of what men earn.4

Women are more likely to take breaks from work to care for others. They also live longer than men, averaging five years more, according to the Social Security Administration. Additionally, women often face higher healthcare costs in retirement.

These realities make comprehensive financial planning essential. The good news? Seeing these challenges is the first step to creating a financial plan with your advisor that tackles them directly.

Five steps to build financial confidence in 2026

1: Get crystal clear on your financial picture

You can’t build confidence without understanding where you stand. Review your complete financial situation—income, expenses, debt, assets, and savings. Many women report feeling confident managing day-to-day finances like paying bills (88 percent) and maintaining good credit (75 percent), but struggle with long-term planning.3 Document everything, then identify gaps between where you are and where you want to be.

2: Create specific, actionable goals

More than two-thirds of women have clear financial goals, and those with specific objectives are more likely to achieve them.1 Whether it’s building an emergency fund, saving for retirement, or investing for long-term wealth, write down your goals and break them into manageable milestones. A roadmap transforms abstract financial anxiety into concrete action steps.

3: Start investing—even if you start small

One of the biggest barriers to wealth building is waiting to invest until you feel “ready.” The truth is, time in the market matters more than timing the market. If your employer offers a 401(k) match, contribute at least enough to capture it. For 2026, you can contribute up to $24,500 to your 401(k) (plus $8,000 catch-up if you’re 50 or older). Automate your investments so you’re consistently building wealth without having to think about it.

4: Educate yourself, but don’t go it alone

Half of women work with financial advisors, compared to just 37 percent of men.5 That’s actually a strength, not a weakness. Seeking expert guidance is a smart strategy for success, and WHZ strategic wealth advisors have the tools to assist you. A qualified financial advisor can help you make tough decisions. They can create a detailed financial plan just for you, and also help you optimize your asset allocation.

FINANCIAL FOCUS

HOLLY C. WANEGAR INVESTMENT ADVISER

5: Focus on long-term strategy, not short-term noise

Women tend to be more deliberate investors, taking on appropriate risk, maintaining diversified portfolios, and taking a disciplined approach. Resist the temptation to make quick decisions based on market volatility. Instead, focus on your strategic plan and make adjustments based on your evolving life circumstances, not market headlines.

Taking the first step

Building financial confidence isn’t about becoming a financial expert overnight. It’s about taking consistent, strategic steps that align with your goals and values. Women who gain more financial freedom do not always earn the most money. They are the ones who take control, ask for help when needed, and stay focused on their long-term goals.

At WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors, our comprehensive approach addresses the specific challenges and opportunities women face. We take time to understand your personal goals, family situation, career trajectory, and values. Our team works together to give you different viewpoints. This includes investment management, tax planning, and legacy issues.

I've been spending a lot of time lately on research and matters pertaining to this area's involvement in the Revolution, so I thought I'd again keep you up-to-date on what was happening 250 years ago, in March 1776. It was an extremely important month for New England and the Greater Boston area in particular. The American forces under General George Washington had been woefully short of artillery. The situation improved in the beginning of March 1776 when his troops, under the cover of darkness, were able to move the 57 guns, which Henry Knox had brought back from the captured Fort Ticonderoga (New York) by oxen and sled, to Dorchester Heights above the British army. On March 4, they began bombarding the British in Boston. Washington prevailed! On March 17, 1776, British General William Howe realized that they could no longer hold the city and began evacuating his 9000 troops who headed for Halifax, Nova Scotia. "In late March following the British evacuation, George Washington began preparing to move the Continental Army to New York to face expected British attacks." For Northeastern Connecticut residents, it meant that many local men would be returning home, at least for a while. Most future battles would be taking place farther from home, and the militias would again be called upon. (<https://www.battlefields.org/learn/revolutionary-war/battles/boston;AI>).

Women were doing their part behind the scenes. This is Women's History Month, so I thought I'd include a little on an intriguing young enslaved woman who lived in Boston at the time of the Revolution. Have you heard of Phillis Wheatley, the first African American woman to "publish a book of poems." "Born around 1753 in Gambia, Africa, Wheatley was captured by enslavers and brought to America in 1761. Upon arrival, she was sold to the Wheatley family in Boston, Massachusetts. Her first name Phillis was derived from the ship that brought her to America, "the Phillis."

"The Wheatley family educated her and within sixteen months of her arrival in America she could read the Bible, Greek and Latin classics, and British literature. She also studied astronomy and geography. In her early teenage years, Wheatley began to write poetry, publishing her first poem in 1767. Publication of 'An Elegiac Poem, on the Death of the Celebrated Divine George Whitefield' in 1770 brought her great notoriety. In 1773, with financial support from the English Countess of Huntingdon, Wheatley traveled to London with the Wheatley's son to publish her first collection of poems, "Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and Moral"—the first book written by an enslaved Black woman in America. It included a forward, signed by John Hancock and other Boston notables—as well as a portrait of Wheatley—all designed to prove that the work was indeed written by a Black woman. She was emancipated shortly thereafter... Although she supported the American Revolution, she believed that slavery was the issue that prevented the colonists from achieving true heroism. She wrote several letters to ministers and others on liberty and freedom. During the peak of her writing career, she wrote a well-received poem praising the appointment of George Washington as the commander of the Continental Army." "In 1778, Wheatley married John Peters, a free Black man from Boston with whom she had three children, though none survived. Efforts to publish a second book of poems failed. To support her family, she worked as a maid in a boardinghouse while continuing to write poetry. Wheatley became ill and died on December 5th, 1784." (<https://www.womenshistory.org/education-resources/biographies/phillis-wheatley>).

Boston was home to a second Revolutionary era female poet who was well known—Mercy Otis Warren. She "was a published poet, political playwright and satirist during the age of the American Revolution—a time when women were encouraged and expected to keep silent on political matters. Warren not only engaged with the leading figures of the day—such as John, Abigail, and Samuel Adams—but she became an outspoken commentator and historian, as well as the leading female intellectual of the Revolution and early republic... An avid patriot, Warren began writing political dramas that denounced British policies and key officials in Massachusetts, notably Governor Thomas Hutchinson. Her 1772 satire, 'The Adulator' (published anonymously in the Massachusetts Spy newspaper), criticized the British colonial governor's policies a full four years before Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. Warren also published two additional plays skewering British colonial leaders, 'Defeat (1773) and The Group (1775.) She supported the Boston Tea Party and boycotts of British imports and urged other women to follow suit..." (<https://www.womenshistory.org/education-resources/biographies/mercy-otis-warren>). The women in Northeastern Connecticut probably would have been following what Mercy Otis Warren was saying and doing since many still had close relatives in the greater Boston area.

Democracy requires participation: contact your representatives

To the Editor:

Have you called your representatives this week? Your call matters. Every call is logged, counted, and shared with the senator or representative and the staff shaping policy. When enough people speak up, it creates pressure. And pressure drives action.

There are so many important issues to address. Pick an issue that matters to you and let your representative know your thoughts:

Constitutional violations, government corruption and foreign influence.

Justice and transparency for victims in the Epstein investigation. This is bigger than Watergate!

Affordability: Rising prices of groceries, health care, housing, energy, and gas.

High costs due to illegal tariffs that have affected U.S. importers and consumers.

Economic instability: inflation, unemployment, mass layoffs, a shrinking GDP and unsustainable growing national deficit.

What about the stock market? It is now below 50,000 points (despite Bondi's February statement ... the "Dow is over 50,000").

Government shutdowns that harm American workers and services.

Tax breaks for billionaires while Americans lose health care, education, and infrastructure funding, yet there is unlimited funding for wars and ICE.

The assault on voting rights and women's reproductive rights.

Mass surveillance of Americans.

Large-scale data breaches affecting millions of Americans as a result of DOGE and hackers.

War and military conflicts that put

American service members at risk.

Declining global trust in U.S. leadership.

Corporate consolidation and monopolies driving up prices in industries like health care, tech, banking, airlines, agriculture, groceries, oil and gas.

Vertical Integration in the Health Care industry where large companies own the Insurers, Pharmacy Benefit Managers, Specialty Pharmacies, Providers and control pricing. The for-profit hospitals that put profit over patients.

Environmental destruction, deregulation, fossil fuels, and polluting data centers.

The need for sustainable energy and serious action on climate change.

Independent news media that has been decimated in favor of government news propaganda.

The impact of AI, social media, and emerging technologies on jobs, privacy, and human well-being. Massive Data Centers polluting communities and draining water supplies.

Immigration policies and detention practices raising humanitarian concerns.

Massive ICE detention centers (concentration camps) being built in communities who don't want them.

Locally, I hope that the proposed massive development between I-395, Westcott Road and Mashentuck Road, totaling over 1.37 million square feet in Killingly is neither an ICE detention facility nor an AI data center.

These issues affect our lives, our communities, and our future. If any of them matter to you, pick up the phone and tell your representative. Democracy only works when people participate.

Valuable services provided

To the Editor:

The Thompson Villager must be commended for providing a valuable service to the local community by aiding some particularly distraught residents of the area. This Opinion Page has become a useful anger-management tool, not unlike a psychiatrist's couch, allowing for the public release of uncontrolled rage by several local Trump Derangement Syndrome (TDS) sufferers who are compelled to express their deep, mostly unfounded, hatred of the President on a weekly basis.

Hate is a powerful emotion that can arise from the most irrational of sources, and has been prominent on this page since 2015 when Donald Trump first arrived on the political scene. These same TDS rants continued weekly even throughout Joe Biden's entire term of office. Hate can become dangerous if left unchecked, but the valuable service provided here allows those seething with rage the opportunity to vent their feelings in an open public forum. However, this public discharge not only benefits these rabid Trump haters, but also the many other readers who so look forward to this weekly dose of insanity as a 'comic relief' from everyday stress. These unhinged letters expressing such outrage always elicit chuckles and

stress reliever.

Billy, Lee, Stephen and Lisa, part of the usual cast of TDS characters, almost seem like close friends who feel comfortable enough to reveal their darkest fears and anxieties for the rest of us to ponder. They seem to entrust us with their angry, misguided thoughts, perhaps not realizing how absurd their rants come across to anyone outside of their not-so-Secret Society of Trump Haters.

Make no mistake, no one takes these diatribes seriously except this small group of very angry, far-left fanatics who are merely, as they say, 'preaching to the choir'. But the TDS Comedy Theatre troupe always provides the rest of us with a few good laughs on a weekly basis, and for that we are grateful.

I am certain that we can expect this regular display of humor to continue well beyond 2028 when Trump's term is over, because there is no indication that there are any democrats close to being qualified to take over the Presidency in the foreseeable future, especially with folks like AOC, Newsom and Kamala constantly struggling to put a coherent thought together. So please, keep those hilarious TDS letters coming. They are priceless!

My 105th editorial

To the Editor:

I've been offering these OpEd letters for well over 10 years. This is my 105th. I say this not to brag, but to show how tragic it's been that we've had to keep at it for so long. I've tried to not be repetitive or merely regurgitate the headlines. But considering the constant flow of idiocy and criminality from Donnie Despot and his cabal it has not been hard.

My first submission was shortly after Donnie-would-be-Dictator came down that escalator. I was appalled that this egomaniac clown would be so moronic to use the Presidential election as just another publicity stunt. It was astounding that he was so stupid to not realize he was debasing a democratic process that carried such exist-tential importance not just to the US but to the entire world as well.

These OpEd letters have not been intended to convert the ardent MAGA and Donnie-King-and-Tyrant supporters. That would be a true exercise in futility. The hope has been to put into perspective what is really going on and the justification to oust not just Donnie Tyrant himself but the philosophy of his movement.

The immediate goal is to win at the midterms. And it must be done with such an overwhelming plurality that no matter how or what Donnie Tyrant does to corrupt the voting process there will be no question of his losing.

Components of fascism: Structure, ideology, and historical examples from Nazi Germany

BY BRUCE P. SHAY
POMFRET CENTER

Let me preface this commentary with a little family history. My grandfather, Rudolph Schay, was a journalist in Germany in the years leading up to the war. He had the opportunity to interview Hitler when Hitler was in prison (think “Mein Kampf”) and wrote extensively about his perceptions of the rising regime and what it would mean for the Jews and other minorities, Germany, and the world at large. For this he was beaten to within an inch of his life by Hitler’s “Brownshirts.” As soon as he had recovered sufficiently, he took my father, Ruben, and fled first to France and then to the Philippines. My father, Ruben Schay (Shay) subsequently fought the Japanese in the Philippines after driving an ambulance for the U.S. Army. Afterward, he immigrated to America, became an American citizen, enlisted in the Army, and served honorably through the Korean and Vietnam conflicts before retiring as a Lt. Col. after more than 20 years of service. I was told a lot about my father’s and grandfather’s experiences and as well have read my grandfather’s treatise regarding the rise of Hitler; I believe that I am in a position to provide a bit of commentary regarding the parallels between then and now.

Fascism is a political ideology and system of governance characterized by extreme nationalism, centralized authoritarian power, suppression of opposition, and a strong emphasis on social hierarchy and unity under the state. The most widely studied example of fascism is the regime established by Adolf Hitler in Nazi Germany between 1933 and 1945. The Nazi state illustrates many of its defining components in a particularly extreme and historically significant way.

Several core components are commonly associated with fascist systems:

1. Authoritarianism

Authoritarianism refers to a political structure in which power is concentrated in the hands of a single leader or a small elite group, with limited or no democratic accountability. Our Congress seems to have abdicated its authority and no longer enforces accountability from the current administration. Under Hitler’s rule, Germany quickly transitioned from the democratic system of the Weimar Republic to a one-party dictatorship. After being appointed chancellor in 1933, Hitler used the crisis following the Reichstag Fire to push through emergency decrees (think “Executive Orders”) that suspended civil liberties. Soon afterward, the Enabling Act of 1933 allowed Hitler’s government to pass laws without parliamentary, i.e., “Congressional” approval. This consolidation of authority meant that political power was no longer dispersed among institutions, but instead flowed directly from Hitler himself. In other words, there were no “Checks and Balances.” In current times, “Executive Orders” are used in a similar fashion. Opposition parties were banned, and dissent became a criminal act. Consider the parallels in our day such as the protest killings in Minneapolis and other cities. Consider also the administration’s desire to “federalize” voting, in conflict with the Constitution, in a blatant attempt to suppress voting rights.

2. Totalitarianism

Totalitarianism extends beyond authoritarian rule by seeking to control nearly every aspect of society, including politics. In modern days, suppression of the Voting Rights Act and the attempt to ratify the “SAVE Act” are current examples. Control of culture such as what is happening at the Kennedy Center, education - Harvard, et al, and personal life are other aspects. The Nazi regime attempted to reshape German society in accordance with its ideology through a process known as Gleichschaltung (coordination). Independent institutions—including trade unions, cultural organizations, and regional governments—were absorbed or replaced by Nazi-controlled bodies. Organizations such as the Hitler Youth and the League of German Girls were created to indoctrinate children and adolescents with Nazi values from an early age. Consider what is happening in our schools today with the mandate to post the 10 Commandments in several states, and mandates and laws prohibiting the teaching of certain topics. Schools, universities, and professional organizations were required to align with state ideology. The goal was not merely political dominance but total cultural and social conformity.

3. Extreme nationalism

Fascism places extraordinary emphasis on national identity, unity, and superiority. The nation is portrayed as an organic community that must be protected and strengthened. In Nazi ideology, nationalism was fused with racial theory. The regime promoted the concept of the “Aryan” German people as a superior race and insisted that the state existed to protect and expand this racial community. Today, White replacement theory is an example of this phenomenon. Propaganda frequently glorified German history and destiny while portraying Germany as a victim of foreign conspiracies and injustices. The current pogroms against immigrants, people of color, and the LGBTQ+ community are prime examples of this.

4. Cult of leadership

Fascist regimes typically center political life around a charismatic leader who embodies the will of the nation. In Nazi Germany, this principle was formalized as the Führerprinzip (“leader principle”). According to this doctrine, absolute authority flowed from Hitler as the supreme leader, whose decisions were considered inherently correct and beyond challenge. Our own Supreme Court is having, at best, difficulty challenging the current administration and reining it in. The same could be said of our Congress. State propaganda—organized by figures such as Joseph Goebbels (Consider one of Trump’s advisors and MAGA in general) portrayed Hitler as Germany’s savior. How many times have we heard, “Only I can solve this?”

5. Militarism and expansionism

Militarism—the glorification of military power and readiness for war—is another hallmark of fascist systems.

The Nazi regime rapidly rebuilt Germany’s armed forces in violation of the Treaty of Versailles. Massive military spending and conscription prepared the country for territorial expansion. Today’s administration’s attempts on Canada, Greenland, Venezuela, Gaza, Cuba and Iran are modern-day examples of this attempt at territorial expansionism. This expansionist agenda led directly to the outbreak of World War II in 1939 when Germany invaded Poland. The war was framed as a necessary step in securing “living space” (Lebensraum) for the German people. We are now experiencing a frightening replay of this with the Iran conflict. This is exemplified by the recent comments from the Secretary of Defense: “...We also don’t fight with stupid rules of engagement... No more politically correct and overbearing rules of engagement.” Germany invaded Poland, sparking World War II. Is the potential (and likely) invasion of Iran a harbinger of World War III?

6. Suppression of opposition

Fascist governments eliminate political opposition through intimidation, censorship, and violence.

The Nazi state created a vast apparatus of repression. The secret police organization known as the Gestapo monitored citizens and eliminated dissent. Political opponents were arrested and imprisoned. In America, ICE fills that role today. Masked and unidentifiable, they terrorize our population. Many were sent to early concentration camps such as Dachau concentration camp, which initially held political prisoners before becoming part of the broader system of camps used by the regime. In today’s America, ICE Detention Centers and off-shore, contracted facilities such as SECOT, fill that role. Captives die every day in these detention centers.

7. Propaganda and information control

Propaganda is essential for maintaining fascist power because it shapes public perception and reinforces ideological narratives. Under the direction of Goebbels, the Nazi regime tightly controlled newspapers. Today, we see the same trend with TV and newspaper outlets such as Fox, CNN, CBS and The Washington Post, among others. Just this past week, the Pentagon publicly criticized the military newspaper, Stars and Stripes and promised an overhaul of the publication because it is “too Woke.” Hegseth’s Defense Department has been particularly antagonistic on this topic. Radio broadcasts are also being controlled. Consider the defunding of NPR, PBS, and Voice of America. This past Saturday, Federal Communications Commission Chair Brendan Carr warned that broadcasters will lose their licenses if they don’t “operate in the public interest” because of their reporting on the Iran conflict, which the administration labeled as “Fake News.” Books deemed contrary to Nazi ideology were publicly destroyed during the Nazi Book Burnings of 1933. Book bans across the United States have been a hallmark of this administration and its followers.

8. Racism and state-sponsored persecution

One of the most extreme features of Nazi fascism was the systematic persecution of groups defined as racially or socially inferior. Muslims, Hispanics, Blacks, other people of color, the LGBTQ+ community fall into this melting pot of discrimination today. The regime institutionalized antisemitism through laws such as the Nuremberg Laws of 1935, which stripped Jews of citizenship and basic rights. These policies eventually escalated into the genocide known as the Holocaust. Millions of people—including Jews, Roma, disabled individuals, political prisoners, and others—were murdered in camps such as Auschwitz concentration camp. Today, ICE has detention centers where people are dying. The administration proposes revoking “Birthright citizenship” and the citizenship of those who came to this country and attained their citizenship through the naturalization process. Under these sorts of proposals, my father, an immigrant refugee, could be stripped of his acquired citizenship and deported, even though he was a decorated combat veteran.

9. Control of the economy

Although fascist regimes often allowed private property and businesses to exist, the state exerted strong influence over economic activity to serve national goals. In Nazi Germany, the government directed industrial production toward military expansion and national self-sufficiency. Businesses were expected to align with state priorities; labor unions were replaced by the state-controlled German Labor Front. Economic policy was therefore subordinated to political and ideological objectives. Today, tariffs and political pressure on certain industries fill this role, damaging our economy and forcing people out of work.

Conclusion

Fascism is not defined by a single policy but by a collection of political and social features. These include authoritarian leadership, totalitarian social control, extreme nationalism, militarism, propaganda, suppression of dissent, and often racist ideology. In the case of Nazi Germany, these components combined to produce one of the most destructive regimes in modern history. The Nazi example demonstrates how fascist systems can dismantle democratic institutions, reshape society through ideology and propaganda, and mobilize state power for aggressive expansion and persecution. Studying these historical patterns helps illuminate the dangers posed by authoritarian movements and underscores the importance of democratic safeguards and civil liberties.

It took Germany (and the world) a generation to substantially recover from the Fascism of the 1930’s and 1940’s. Is this really what you want? Really?

Narcan training course rescheduled due to snowstorm

DAYVILLE — In response to the ongoing opioid crisis, The Northeast Insurance Professionals and Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association have collaborated to provide a Narcan Training Course open to all community members. The training course will take place on March 25 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. (rescheduled from Feb. 25), at the Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association, 399 Route 169 in Woodstock.

This educational session is designed to equip participants with the knowledge and confidence to recognize and respond to an opioid overdose. Attendees will learn how to identify the warning signs and symptoms, how Narcan works and how to properly administer Narcan during an overdose. Trainer devices will be available for participants to practice the action of administering Narcan when responding to an emergency.

"Naloxone saves lives. When more people are trained and prepared, our entire community benefits," said NEIP President, Lysa Molnar. "This training empowers individuals in our community to act quickly and confidently during an emergency."

Narcan is a safe, FDA-approved medication that can reverse the effects of an opioid overdose within minutes. The training is appropriate for parents, educators, business owners, healthcare professionals and any concerned community member.

The event is limited to 30 attendees, and light refreshments will be provided. A $10 donation is requested that will fund the Fire Association's ongoing training for public safety.

To register or to learn more, contact Lysa Molnar, NEIP President by emailing neip18@yahoo.com or call 860-377-0755.

By increasing access to overdose prevention education and lifesaving tools, the Northeast Insurance Professionals and Woodstock Volunteer Fire Association aims to reduce stigma, prevent overdose fatalities, and strengthen community response efforts.

Woodstock Dems' Souper Supper fundraiser set for March 21

WOODSTOCK — "Soup by the people, for the people" is, once again, the tried and true "recipe" for the popular Souper Supper community celebration hosted each March by the Woodstock Democratic Town Committee. This year's event is set for Saturday, March 21, at the East Woodstock Congregational Church, corner of Woodstock Road and Dr. Pike Road in East Woodstock.

In response to last year's demand (140 customers!), the hours have been extended to 4:30 - 7:30 p.m. Ticket prices are the same as last year: $10 for adults and $25 for families. Tickets are available at the door or by calling event coordinator Peg Wilson at 860-928-0773.

Soup lovers can rejoice!

Many popular, crowd-pleasing soups featured in past years are expected to headline the menu again this year. Along with a multitude of soups including vegetarian, the menu also includes appetizers, bread and butter, dessert and non-alcoholic beverages.

The Souper Supper has been an annual Woodstock tradition since 2001. 2026 marks its 24th year!

"Come and enjoy!" Peg Wilson encourages. "The WDTC welcomes Democrats, Independents, unaffiliated voters, even Republicans!, plus citizens from all towns," Wilson said. "Join us and dine; it's a sit-down event in a friendly atmosphere as we celebrate the democratic electoral process."

To ensure public health and safety, all food is prepared in a kitchen inspected and certified by the Northeast District Department of Health (NDDH).
