Killingly taking measures to address swatting threats

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

KILLINGLY — Killingly is one of several school districts throughout the state that has been the victim of numerous swatting incidents, many over just the last few months. The district has begun working with both local and federal law enforcement to better respond to and anticipate these incidents, which Superintendent Dr. Susan Nash said are more than just pranks.

Dr. Nash explained to the Board of Education on May 13 that the district has been working with several different agencies to help respond to the growing trend of swatting which she said are usually the product of national and international organizations rather than students trying to get out of school or interrupt the school day. Swatting is defined as the malicious reporting of a threat, such as an active shooter or a bomb, with the intent of drawing emergency responders to the target location. Killingly's most recent incident was on May 11, their fifth just during this school year.

"Killingly has been the target of several swatting episodes in maybe the last eight weeks, just a significant amount of swatting," said Nash. "I reached out to the Commissioner of Public Safety at the state level and said, 'I don't know if you know what's happening here, but we need help.' When it's happening to you, you think the entire world knows this is happening. You feel that pressure, but he really didn't. He knew a couple of northeastern towns had gotten hit with swatting, but not to the extent."

State Commissioner of Public Safety Ronnell Higgins called together a team that includes representatives of Homeland Security, the Center for School Safety, the Connecticut State Police, and crisis prevention leaders from across Connecticut to engage in discussions with Killingly regarding this disturbing trend.

Killingly Assistant Superintendent Andrea Drake said these meetings have been productive, but creating a universally effective solution is quite difficult, especially as the district practices taking every threat seriously for the safety of students and staff.

"There were proactive measures that had already been established even before we received some of these swatting reports. We've updated our threat assessment protocols to align with state evidence-based standards, something called the Comprehensive School Threat Assessment Guidelines (CSTAG) that lets us evaluate threat risk to our schools. We're really proud of that work and were actually commended when we were meeting with some of these agencies about some of the work that's been done here as it relates to school safety, so that was nice to hear," said Drake.

Some immediate efforts put in place were coordinated training involving principals and secretaries working with state police to ensure they are on the same page in responding to these incidents. They also updated a swatting telephonic intake form and electronic threat intake

PUTNAM — Putnam Science Academy celebrated its 24th graduation ceremony on Saturday, May 16, on the school's campus, marking one of the largest and most memorable graduating classes in school history.

The day was absolutely beautiful and was filled with inspiring speeches, emotional moments, and celebration as 93 students received their diplomas — making it one of the biggest graduating classes in PSA history.

"It was one of the best graduations we've had yet," school officials said. "The weather was great, the speeches were fantastic, and the students were unbelievable. It truly was a special day."

The ceremony featured keynote speaker Eric Kapitulik, a motivational speaker from Thompson, Connecticut, who captivated the audience with a message of leadership, perseverance, and personal growth.

The welcome speech was delivered by Martyn Poliuchovic, who came to the United States after the war in Ukraine began four and a half years ago. His message resonated with

Locals join Governor's blue ribbon commission

BY JASON BLEAU
VILLAGER CORRESPONDENT

REGION — Two local representatives from the Quiet Corner have been named to Gov. Ned Lamont's Blue-Ribbon Commission on K-12 Education Funding & Accountability.

The commission was announced in April with the goal of developing a strategic plan to reform the funding streams used to support the operations of K-12 public schools throughout the state. Their responsibilities will include examining aspects of the funding like the Education Cost Sharing grant, the state's main funding formula which the Governor calls "outdated." The commission will be charged with producing a report containing strategies to optimize funding streams the state provides to support public education.

While the general assembly recently approved millions of dollars for supplemental education grants and municipal aid to support educators and programs, the governor feels the state needs to do better in its approach to its education funding formula.

"Connecticut has been making significant investments in our schools, and the aid we secured this session was critical to keep teachers in classrooms and protect programs that students depend on," Lamont said in a statement. "But investment alone isn't

Should grandparents fund 529 plans or use trust strategies instead?

As families begin to think more intentionally about generational wealth, one question tends to come up fairly often: what’s the best way to support the next generation in a meaningful, thoughtful way?

Often, that conversation leads to two options—a 529 plan or a trust. And while it’s tempting to look for a clear answer, the better approach usually depends on what you’re trying to accomplish, how your family operates, and how much structure or flexibility you want over time.

A 529 plan is one of the most straightforward ways to support education. It’s designed specifically for that purpose, and in many cases, it does that job very well. You have tax-deferred growth, and when funds are used for qualified education expenses, those withdrawals are tax-free. Contribution limits are high, and there are estate planning benefits, including the ability to front-load multiple years of gifts.

Just as important, the account owner—often the grandparent—retains control. Recent rule changes have also made these plans more practical, with distributions from grandparent-owned 529 plans no longer counting as student income on the FAFSA, removing a concern that used to come up frequently.

Where 529 plans tend to work best is when the goal is clear. If the focus is education, and simplicity and tax efficiency are priorities, this can be a very effective tool. At the same time, it’s helpful to recognize that 529 plans are built for a specific purpose. That clarity is a strength, but it also creates limitations. The funds are tied to education, and if they’re used for something else, there may be penalties.

Although, that has changed a bit in recent years. Now, 529s can be converted to a Roth IRA if the child doesn’t use them on education. In addition, if one child doesn’t use the funds, they can be transferred to another relative.

That being said, if your intention is to support broader life goals, or to guide how money is used over time, a 529 plan may not fully address that.

This is where trusts come into the conversation. A trust allows you to take a more intentional approach—not just to what the money is used for, but how and when it’s used. You can define distribution rules, build in protections, and create a framework that supports multiple life stages.

For example, a trust might fund education early on and later support a first home purchase or a business opportunity. It can also help protect assets from risks like creditors or poor financial decisions.

FINANCIAL FOCUS

And importantly, it introduces structure. A significant portion of family wealth is lost over time, often not because of poor intent, but because there wasn’t enough planning or guidance in place. A trust can help address that by building in guardrails that align with your values.

That level of flexibility does come with added complexity. Trusts require legal setup, ongoing administration, and coordination with tax and estate planning professionals. They’re not something you put in place and forget about—they’re part of a broader, coordinated strategy.

In many cases, the most thoughtful approach isn’t choosing one or the other—it’s using both. A 529 plan can handle education funding in a tax-efficient, straightforward way, while a trust provides flexibility and structure for everything beyond that. Together, they allow you to support immediate needs while also thinking about the longer-term picture.

Ultimately, this decision isn’t just about choosing between a 529 plan and a trust. It’s about being clear on what you want this money to do and how it fits into the bigger picture of your family’s financial plan.

If you’re considering how to support your children or grandchildren in a way that’s both meaningful and strategic, this is where thoughtful planning can make a real difference. At WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors, we help families bring these pieces together—education planning, tax strategy, estate planning, and long-term wealth transfer—into one cohesive approach. You can schedule a discovery session at whzwealth.com or call us at (860) 928-2341 to start that conversation and build a plan designed to give you Absolute Confidence, Unwavering Partnership, For Life.

The fees, expenses, and features of 529 plans can vary from state to state. 529 plans involve investment risk, including the possible loss of funds. There is no guarantee that an education-funding goal will be met. In order to be federally tax free, earnings must be used to pay for qualified education expenses. The earnings portion of a nonqualified withdrawal will be subject to ordinary income tax at the recipient’s marginal rate and subject to a 10 percent penalty. By investing in a plan outside your state of residence, you may lose any state tax benefits. 529 plans are subject to enrollment, maintenance, and administration/management fees and expenses. The picturesque landscape includes the original boxwood parterre garden, which is planted with over 5000 annuals each spring, an icehouse, aviary, carriage barn, and, remarkably, the nation's oldest surviving indoor bowling alley. The Pink House is as beautiful inside as out, with elaborate wall coverings, heavily patterned carpets, stained glass, and furnishings in the Gothic Revival style that date back to the construction of the house in 1846. A loss of EMS services in Brooklyn

To the Editor:

There is a proposed change to our ambulance provider in Brooklyn. The decision to make this change has not been presented to the town. At their member meeting on March 30, the Mortlake Board of Directors orchestrated a fraudulent vote which has determined going forward with an ambulance contract with American Ambulance, a division of Hartford Healthcare. At their vote, the Board of Directors did not follow their bylaws and handpicked which members would not be able to vote because of a conflict of interest shared by other members not singled out. Ironically, these members, that were excluded from voting, were those with the most ambulance experience, several of them volunteers for our ambulance service. This is an ethical violation and is being addressed at the town level.

The two ambulance services being considered at the vote were American Ambulance, and Vintech (who currently staffs our ambulance during the day with added shifts at night). In the budget numbers presented to the Fire Commissioners on April 8, the numbers for Vintech were inflated, making them look like a much more expensive option than American Ambulance. Here are the facts for both ambulance services:

American Ambulance has offered to fulfill 24/7 ambulance service for our town for $100,000 per year, with a $5,000 increase annually for five years. They will be losing money on this contract, with the idea that they can get their foot in the door as an ambulance provider in our area of state. When year 6 comes, I'm sure they will no longer take a loss. With this option, we would sell our ambulances and likely lose our volunteer EMTs, as their role in our emergency services would be significantly reduced. We would also cut our town emergency medical services from 2 ambulances to only 1. Although Medicare and Medicaid fees for using the ambulance cannot be changed, rates would increase for those of us not on Medicare or Medicaid. We do have the option of leaving this contract at any point, but once our ambulances have been sold and we would no longer have volunteer EMTs, our options to do anything else would be limited and our hands would be tied.

Vintech will allow us to keep both of our ambulances and our volunteer EMTs will be able to take second calls with the second ambulance. Recently we had 4 second calls over the course of a weekend and I'm sure that the patients involved in those calls were grateful that they didn't have to experience longer response times waiting for mutual aid. Vintech is offering 24/7 ambulance service for $423,000. This would be offset by the ambulance billing the town would receive at $614,830. The rest of the expenses associated with this option (fuel, repairs, billing costs, medical supplies, etc.) would be $193,634.80, leaving a net cost of $1,804.80. The one thing that this doesn't account for is the capital expense of periodically replacing an ambulance. Budgeting for $100,000 a year (the same cost as American Ambulance) would take care of this, leaving both options at essentially the same cost to the town.

The Mortlake Board of Directors has not been transparent or objective with their presentation of these options and achieved their vote through unethical maneuvering. I urge all town residents to attend the town forum on May 28 at 7 p.m. at the Middle School. Please ask questions and urge the Mortlake Board of Directors and Fire Commissioners to retrace their steps, allowing for public input into this decision and scheduling a re-vote which does not exclude those fire department members most knowledgeable about the emergency medical services in our town.

Science requires debate, not consensus

To the Editor:

Following is my response that I believe pushes back firmly while staying intellectually grounded instead of sounding emotional or dismissive.

The response titled "A Chance to Learn More" to my original letter spends a great deal of time attempting to discredit me personally while largely avoiding the central issue I raised, and that is the repeated pattern of catastrophic climate predictions failing to materialize as advertised.

The Maldives example was never presented as proof that climate changes do not occur. Climate has always changed. Always. We've all heard of the Ice Age, but that largely disappeared, though last winter may cause some to disagree. The point was that we have been told for decades that the Maldives faced imminent disappearance from rising seas, yet instead we see expanding infrastructure, booming tourism, artificial island growth, and continued long-term investment. If the threat were truly existential on the timelines repeatedly claimed, global investors and governments would not be pouring billions into development there.

Ironically, the author confirms part of my argument. He acknowledges that beaches are being replenished, sea walls are being built, and engineering solutions are being implemented successfully. That is not evidence of inevitable climate catastrophe; it is evidence of human adaptability and resilience. Civilization has always adapted to environmental conditions, whether through dams, levees, irrigation systems, air conditioning, or coastal engineering.

The author also accuses me of "confirmation bias," yet immediately appeals to consensus rather than engaging honestly with scientific uncertainty. Science is not decided by popularity contests, political pressure, or the number of papers published. Throughout history, scientific consensus has been wrong many times (see COVID-19). Real science welcomes skepticism because skepticism is essential to testing assumptions.

When will it be enough?

To the Editor:

"Late Night with Stephen Colbert" is history. No big deal, right? Shows get cancelled all the time for various reasons. But this is different. Our thin-skinned egomaniac president wants to silence anyone who disagrees with him or makes fun of him, and he's using the power of The Oval Office to make it happen.

Every American (regardless of political preference) should be worried and angry. Freedom of Speech and Freedom of the Press are cornerstones of this great nation. Generations of my fellow veterans have shed blood and died to preserve those rights. Obviously, that means nothing to the self-centered draft-dodger sitting in our White House.

Trump continues to act like a third-world dictator. He's trampled on the Constitution, started a senseless war, uses the DOJ for revenge on political adversaries, lines his family's pockets with foreign business deals, and spends taxpayer's money for vanity projects while the cost of living goes through the roof. When will Congressional Republicans show some backbone and say "Enough" to this out of control corrupt lunatic?

When every threat must be treated as real

Few things strike fear into a community faster than hearing there may be a threat inside a school building. Parents freeze. Teachers move into action. Police officers rush toward uncertainty. Students, even when they try to appear calm, absorb the stress in ways that can linger long after the day is over.

That is what makes swatting incidents so damaging and so deeply irresponsible.

The recent discussion by Killingly school officials about the repeated swatting incidents targeting the district should concern every resident of Northeastern Connecticut. Five incidents in a single school year is not a harmless prank. It is a direct attack on a community's sense of safety and stability.

What makes these situations especially difficult is that schools and emergency responders do not have the luxury of assuming a threat is fake. Every call must be treated seriously. Every procedure must be followed. Every classroom must respond as though the danger could be real, because one day it might be.

That reality creates enormous pressure not only on students and staff, but also on police officers, dispatchers, firefighters, parents, and school administrators trying to make critical decisions in real time.

It was encouraging to hear Superintendent Dr. Susan Nash and Assistant Superintendent Andrea Drake speak candidly about the seriousness of the issue and the coordinated effort now underway involving local law enforcement, Connecticut State Police, Homeland Security, the Center for School Safety, and federal authorities. The fact that Killingly officials reached beyond the local level for additional support reflects the scale of what districts across the country are facing.

Their comments also highlighted something the public sometimes overlooks during emergencies: communication takes time when accuracy matters.

In the social media era, rumors often travel faster than facts. A single vague post can spread panic throughout a town in minutes. Parents understandably want information immediately, but officials also have an obligation to verify details, coordinate with investigators, and avoid releasing inaccurate or incomplete information that could worsen confusion.

That balancing act is not easy.

There is also an emotional cost that cannot be measured in reports or statistics. Students who repeatedly experience lockdowns or emergency responses begin carrying a level of anxiety no child should have to normalize. Teachers and school staff, meanwhile, must continue creating calm and productive classrooms even after stressful disruptions. Over time, repeated false threats chip away at the sense of security schools work so hard to build.

What stands out most in Killingly's response is the emphasis on preparation rather than panic. Updating threat assessment protocols, coordinating with law enforcement, improving intake procedures, and refining visitor access policies are all practical steps rooted in caution and professionalism. Those efforts deserve community support.

At the same time, this issue serves as a reminder that technology has made it easier than ever for malicious actors, sometimes operating far outside the local area or even outside the country, to disrupt small communities. Rural districts are no longer insulated from national trends. A town like Killingly can suddenly find itself dealing with the same coordinated threats affecting major cities and suburban districts across the nation.

That can feel unsettling, but it also reinforces the importance of strong local relationships between schools, law enforcement, parents, and municipal leaders. In moments of uncertainty, trust matters.

There may never be a perfect solution to swatting. As long as individuals seek attention, chaos, or disruption through anonymous threats, schools will remain vulnerable to these cruel acts. But preparation, communication, and community cooperation remain the strongest tools available.

The people making these false reports may view them as entertainment or disruption from behind a screen. In reality, they are forcing children to fear for their lives, pulling emergency personnel away from legitimate emergencies, and placing enormous strain on entire communities.

That is not mischief. That is harm.

And communities like Killingly are right to treat it that way.

I wanted to see some of the area's May happenings, so looked at extracts of the 1936 Windham County Transcript, which Marilyn Labbe had given me. The May 21, 1936 issue had an article about the dedication of the Catholic Church in Brooklyn. "Brooklyn's new Roman Catholic church, known as St. Mary's but hereafter to be designated as Our Lady of LaSalette, is to be dedicated on Sunday by Rt. Rev. Maurice F. McAuliffe, Bishop of the Hartford diocese, with impressive ceremonies. There will be a mass at 8.30 a.m., and the dedication program will open at 11 a.m., with the laying of the cornerstone and the blessing of the chapel to its patron saint by Bishop McAuliffe. In the cornerstone will be placed various relics and records to be preserved for posterity. Immediately following this ceremony, a solemn high mass is to be celebrated by Rev. Anthelme F. Mollard, M. S., pastor of St. James' parish, with which the Brooklyn mission is affiliated. Rev. Arthur R. Vegiard, M. S., of Louisiana, who is spending a vacation at his home here, will be master of ceremonies. Other officers of the mass will be announced later. Music will be by St. James' choir under the direction of Mrs. Joseph Gareau. After the mass, Bishop McAuliffe and visiting priests will be guests at luncheon at the home of Daniel Smith.

"The chapel of Our Lady of LaSalette is a beautiful little edifice of stone in simple Gothic style of architecture, situated on an eminence on the Danielson road in Brooklyn Center. Constructed of carefully selected native stone, the building gives an impression of solidarity and its setting is ideal, broad lawns sweeping down to the highway and numbers of handsome shade trees in the near vicinity. At the rear is an ample parking space, which will make it unnecessary for motorists to leave their cars on the heavily traveled thoroughfare. Entering the chapel, one is impressed by the beauty of its sanctified simplicity. Prominent over the white and gold altar is a statue of the Crowned Virgin of LaSalette, brought from Lyons, France. Placed in a niche, with daylight filtering through from a concealed window above, it is most effective. The altar, statue, golden candlesticks and crucifix, stations of the cross and stained glass memorial windows are all gifts of devoted parishioners... Actual work on the construction of the building was commenced about a year ago and had progressed sufficiently so that the first

Earth — Sunburned

To the Editor:

I remember a lot about the 70s. One thing that comes to mind is getting sunburned. It seemed a summer ritual to get a wicked burn on your first annual trip to the beach, sleep terribly that night because of it, then have your little sister peel the dead skin off your back over the next few days. I have no memory of sunscreen at all until well after college.

After college, in the early 90s, I lived in Southern California and worked in a branch office of a mid-sized environmental engineering firm. Included among the 20 or so people there was Dee, the office manager's wife. Nobody really knew what she did other than express strong opinions about everything while smoking a cigarette. She always had one burning between her fingers. Dee was a hardcore sun worshipper too, and though she couldn't have been much older than 50, she looked every bit of 80. I don't know what ever happened to her, but I always thought that if anyone would get melanoma or lung cancer, it was Dee.

In the '70s, I also remember my dad pushing the lawn mower in the backyard in his white undershirt with a pack of cigarettes rolled into the sleeve. His old pal Larry and my uncle Bruce also did the same thing. They'd hold the pack against their shoulder and fold the sleeve over it, and there it stayed neatly tucked. As a little boy, I thought this looked cool and was something most men did. This exact image was portrayed in an episode of the TV show "Mad Men." Don Draper was out in the yard smoking with his pack rolled up in his sleeve, and to me, this one scene gave the show a feel of authenticity. Legend has it that in the 1950s, when new Navy recruits like my dad, Larry, and Uncle Bruce were issued their foot lockers, the quartermaster slapped two cartons of cigarettes on top — standard issue. If you didn't already smoke, you were practically instructed to!

"More doctors smoke Camels than any other brand." Do an internet search and you'll find old TV commercials and magazine ads from the 1940s and 50s saying laughable things like that. In one "Leave It to Beaver"-era commercial I watched, an actor dressed in a white lab coat while smoking a Camel cigarette, said: "This is the brand I recommend to my patients."

Looking back, we might feel humanity was remarkably clueless about things that seem remarkably obvious today. Spending half my career in risk management, I think about that idea often — the lag time between doing something risky, destructive, and downright stupid, and finally realizing how destructive it is. The widespread use of Roundup (glyphosate) in the U.S. is a modern example. Although it's been banned across much of the world, including the EU, Mexico, and Vietnam, Trump recently issued executive orders on glyphosate that encourage its expanded domestic use and making the U.S. government its biggest buyer. This despite more than 180,000 lawsuits totaling over $12 billion in claims against the manufacturer for toxic effects including lymphoma. Glyphosate is also widely known to kill pollinating bees critical to humanity's food supply.

Far and away, the most dangerous thing some 25 percent of Americans still deny, well into the 21st century, is the harm of climate change. Some doubt is of course understandable, until you examine how that position is formed. Since 97 percent of the world's climate scientists agree climate change is real, man-made, and could imperil civilization, nonbelievers must put their trust in the remaining 3 percent. Of course, some credible scientists genuinely hold contrary views. After all, a 100 percent consensus on anything is nearly impossible. But as the years pass, they are an ever-shrinking minority.

Most climate change denial rhetoric today comes from hired guns that craft their opposing argument intentionally to instill doubt in hard climate science. Their job as a hired gun is quite literally to sell doubt. Harvard Professor, Naomi Oreskes tells this deeply disturbing story of deceit and betrayal in her remarkable book "Merchants of Doubt."

In her book, Dr. Oreskes describes a strategy where hired guns publish articles and reports with virtually none of the peer review or scientific scrutiny legitimate science undergoes. To ordinary people, hearing that "Dr. So-and-so says climate change isn't real" can sound credible. That position is quickly accepted and broadcast across many media platforms that do not rely on credible science sources. In addition to lacking peer review, also missing from a given report is the critical fact that the "scientist" who wrote it was been paid $400,000 by the American Petroleum Institute or another oil company. This hired gun strategy was used by the tobacco industry for more than 50 years to delay action (and responsibility) for killing millions.

Seeing the effectiveness of selling doubt, the fossil fuel industry has taken Tobacco's playbook as their operating manual to deny, obfuscate, and delay change. It shouldn't surprise you to learn — though it still does — that the fossil fuel industry is not merely mimicking tobacco's strategy; it's actually hiring the exact same PR firms, law firms, and even the same dubious scientists who worked for tobacco in the '60s, '70s, and '80s.

While the kingpins of the oil industry sacrifice our planet for money, it doesn't change these basic truths most of us have come to accept: cigarettes have killed millions and can kill you, too much sunburn can cause skin cancer and kill you, Roundup kills pollinators and even our citizens by the thousands, and, climate change is real, it is primarily caused by burning fossil fuels, and it jeopardizes our children's future.

Thanks, Paws — I knew I was right

To the Editor:

The Paws Cat Shelter folks' attempt at a rebuttal just reinforces every point I was making about how we need to send bottle deposits into the history books.

I've known for a while about nonprofits collecting cans and bottles in bulk for recycling, and I've even heard of businesses with equipment to mass-process cans and bottles for people who don't want to fight the ill-maintained can and bottle machines one container at a time. All of this is just hard evidence that bottle deposits are a woefully outdated form of recycling from a generation ago, and instead of acknowledging the passage of time, the state of Connecticut is spending your tax dollars chasing people cashing in cans and bottles from out of state because our deposit's higher.

Whether profit or nonprofit, these workarounds just showcase how bottle deposits are such an outdated waste of time, a waste of our tax dollars, and a pittance of a micro-tax on beverages. These numerous groups will step up to the plate to try to help you get out of this senseless chore that's completely not worth your time or annoyance. Ultimately, the way this system is supposed to work is so ineffective that organizations are trying to convert it into something else.

Recycling is established now. The technology has advanced by a generation. I don't expect a return to litter being absolutely everywhere, like in the days where people were adjusting to the rollout of bottle deposits and previous cans said, "Please Don't Litter" or "Put Litter In Its Place." Recycling has also been around long enough to know where we're getting the most bang for our buck. Metal is the runaway winner. Plastic and paper struggle to be worth it outside of niche applications of recycled materials.

The nonprofits and can recyclers don't need to shut down either, if we ended this system and stopped skimming off the top of people's love for beverages. I say fold cans and bottles into regular recycling, including recycling in bulk with similar materials. Let the nonprofits continue making recycling runs, but deal with the materials as a whole instead of some workarounds or fighting with a can machine all afternoon.

Inflation averages three percent a year, except maybe in recent years where we've had trouble controlling it. Can and bottle deposits went up a nickel in 30 years. If can and bottle deposits are supposed to be a carrot on a stick to encourage recycling, it is now a fossilized rotted out carrot dangling from a weathered rotted termite-infested tree branch or whatever visual you want to use.

No thanks. It's time to stop living in the past.

It is up to us to hold those we elect accountable

To the Editor:

This July 4, we will celebrate 250 years as a country. Sure, we are a young country, but we have accomplished much in our 250 years and made life better for our citizens.

Connecticut had a lot to do with the birth of our United States. Fifty-six men would sign the most important documents that birthed our country. Four of those men were local men, some educated, some not so much, some lawyers, others farmers. Although not as educated, the farmers had the gift of common sense which helped in their decision making. All of them had strong beliefs about what this new country should entail.

Some of our founders are buried nearby. Roger Sherman's grave is in Grove Cemetery in Eastford. He was one of the two Connecticut signers of the Constitution. His distinction includes being the only founding father to have signed all four of our founding documents.

Samuel Huntington was born in the Scotland Society of Windham and lived in Norwich. He was elected to represent the colonies at the 2nd Continental Congress in 1776. He signed the Declaration of Independence after several weeks of discussion among the founders. Our founders had plenty of heated disagreements among themselves and yet were able to come together for the good of the republic. They put aside those disagreements to make the new republic work. There is a valuable lesson there for today.

In 1861, Nathaniel Lyon of Eastford was the first general of the Union army to die in the Civil War. He is buried in a small cemetery in Phoenixville on the banks of the Natchaug River. Israel Putnam left his plow in the field and marched to Boston to join other New Englanders in fighting the British. He is buried under the monument of him astride his horse in Brooklyn.

Both of those men saw the importance of fighting for their country.

Our founders sacrificed everything because they truly believed in freedom and making the Constitution the supreme law of the land. They also believed in checks and balances to make the Constitution lasting. Now it is up to us to keep this document alive and working as it was intended.

The Presidents we elect, the members of Congress and the military all take an oath to uphold the US Constitution. It is up to us, the citizens who support them, to hold their feet to the fire to ensure that they live up to the oaths they took. They represent us, not the President.

God Bless America.

Stop the $1.776 billion slush fund — your money, your voice

To the Editor:

The Trump administration has created a $1.776 billion "Anti-Weaponization Fund" a.k.a. "slush fund," drawn from the federal Treasury without a congressional vote to appropriate a single dollar.

This settlement involves Trump suing two agencies he himself oversees, the IRS and the Treasury Department, both of which were represented by a Justice Department (DOJ) that Trump is using in pursuit of his personal interests. The settlement deal also bars the government from pursuing tax claims against Trump, his family, and his businesses. (An adverse ruling from an audit could potentially have cost the president $100 million, according to a New York Times analysis of his earlier tax returns.)

Critics across the political spectrum, including legal experts, watchdog groups, Democratic lawmakers, and Senate Republicans have raised concerns about the lack of oversight and eligibility standards surrounding the fund. Reuters reported that the attorney general will appoint the five-member commission overseeing payouts, that decisions may not be appealable, and that public disclosure of payouts is not required.

Concerns intensified after Acting Attorney General Todd Blanche declined to say whether people convicted of assaulting Capitol Police officers on January 6 would be excluded from receiving compensation. Former Proud Boys leader Enrique Tarrio has publicly said he intends to seek $5 million from the fund. Others are already sending letters to request funds.

Here are the facts about the fund:

The fund was established as part of a settlement of Trump's $10 billion lawsuit against the IRS, meaning the president sued the very government he controls, and awarded himself a nearly $2 billion fund as a result. (Time)

Two U.S. Capitol Police officers who defended the building on January 6 filed suit to block the fund, arguing that paying rioters could increase the risk of future vigilante violence against law enforcement. (The Daily Caller) The police officer's lawsuit describes it as "the most brazen act of presidential corruption this century." (PBS)

Sen. Susan Collins stated plainly: "I do not believe individuals that were convicted of violence against police officers on Jan. 6 should be entitled to reimbursement of their legal fees." (CNN)

Sen. Bill Cassidy said, "People are concerned about paying their mortgage or rent, affording groceries and paying for gas, not about putting together a $1.8 billion fund for the President and his allies to pay whom-ever they wish with no legal precedent or accountability." (NPR)

The fund is already so toxic that Senate Republicans, blindsided by the announcement, couldn't muster 50 votes, derailing a priority GOP spending package and sending Congress home for Memorial Day recess in disarray. (CNN)

Whether you support or oppose Donald Trump, taxpayers deserve transparency, accountability, and clear legal guardrails when billions of public dollars are involved. Democracy depends on checks and balances, regardless of who is in power.

It is time to act. Republican senators are finally taking a stand. Your call right now can tip the balance. Spread the word.

Call Congress: (202) 224-3121 — Ask for your senator by name.

Tell them: Stop the $1.776 billion Slush Fund. No guardrails, no vote, no accountability — kill the fund.

The window is narrow. Congress returns the first week of June with a self-imposed deadline. Make your voices heard now.

We already have a ballroom

To the Editor:

Just over a mile from the White House sits the Andrew W. Mellon Auditorium, described as a “show-stopping masterpiece of Neoclassical architecture.” The grand room is capable of hosting around 650 seated guests and up to about 1,000 people in total—about the size for Donnie-Destructo’s ego-show. By the way, the Mellon Auditorium has been used by many Presidents, including Donnie-Dimwit. So why do we need another? And let’s try to understand why he wants a bunker underneath, unless he needs it to survive a civil uprising or refuses to leave office.

His proposed $1.77 billion slush fund is rank corruption. The Constitution is clear that only Congress has the power to authorize expenditures. This was set up specifically to prevent one person taking control of spending to bribe his supporters.

In my naive view of the law, why isn’t RICO being used against Donnie-Dingbat? His entire existence and Administration constitute a criminal enterprise. He has defiled the Constitution repeatedly and has ignored laws intended to control corruption or to protect the health and safety of our people. There is overwhelming evidence for RICO conviction, but that same evidence is being ignored by the very people it would convict. Catch-22?

This Memorial Weekend, I watched a number of war movies. In almost every one, there was someone explaining why they were fighting. In the 1949 WWII movie “Battleground,” about a squad in the Battle of the Bulge, an Army Chaplain says the reason they were there was to defeat Fascism. Then he added, “Never let anyone say you were a sucker for being here”. Today that “anyone” is Commander in Chief Donnie-Demented. I challenge any of you MAGA’s to write an Op-Ed letter justifying this egregious insult to those who protected the USA.

I am old enough to remember when Memorial Day was celebrated on May 31 and was not a Monday holiday. I’m sure there are a few readers that remember that too. An internet search revealed that the Uniform Monday Act was passed in 1968, but Memorial Day was not officially celebrated on the last Monday in May until 1971. (Airborne and Special Operations Museum and others).

“The origins of Memorial Day can be traced back to the aftermath of the American Civil War. As the conflict ended in 1865, people across the country began holding ceremonies to honor the Union and Confederate soldiers who had died in the conflict. One of the earliest known ceremonies took place in Charleston, South Carolina, in May 1865, when a group of freed slaves gathered to commemorate fallen Union soldiers buried in a local racecourse. The first national observance of Memorial Day, then known as Decoration Day, was declared by General John A. Logan of the Grand Army of the Republic on May 5, 1868. The day was designated as a time to decorate the graves of the fallen with flowers and to hold ceremonies to honor their sacrifice.” (https://carrytheload.org/carry-the-flag/memorial-day/?gad_source=1&gad_campaignid=17349076739)

Three WHZ advisors named to Forbes SHOOK 2026 Best-In-State Wealth Advisors List

LANGEVIN ALSO EARNS TOP WOMEN WEALTH ADVISOR HONOR

James Zahansky

Laurence Hale

Lisa Langevin

POMFRET CENTER/TOLLAND — WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors is proud to announce that three of its advisors have earned recognition on Forbes SHOOK's prestigious 2026 national rankings.

James Zahansky, AAWMA®, Senior Managing Partner and Chief Strategist; Laurence Hale, AAMS®, CRPS®, Senior Partner and Chief Investment Officer; and Leisl L. Langevin, CFP®, CDFA®, Managing Partner, Advisory, have all been named to the 2026 Forbes SHOOK Best-In-State Wealth Advisors list for Connecticut. Additionally, Langevin is among just 58 women advisors recognized with the Top Women distinction statewide and remains the only advisor from Windham and Tolland counties to receive it. She is also one of three WHZ advisors named to the 2026 Best-In-State list.

The Forbes Best-In-State Wealth Advisors ranking, now in its ninth year, was developed by SHOOK Research and published April 7, based on data from June 30, 2024, through June 30, 2025. The ranking is based on both quantitative and qualitative factors, including in-person, virtual, and telephone due diligence interviews, client impact, industry experience, client retention, compliance records, best practices, credentials, assets under management, and revenue. This year's honorees collectively oversee $20.6 trillion in client assets across the country.

The Forbes Top Women Wealth Advisors Best-In-State ranking was published Feb. 4, also based on data as of June 30, 2025, and developed using the same rigorous qualitative and quantitative methodology. Out of more than 51,000 nominations received nationally, just over 2,800 women advisors earned recognition on this year's list. Langevin is among just 58 women advisors in Connecticut to receive this statewide distinction.

As Senior Managing Partner and Chief Strategist,

Zahansky leads WHZ's overall firm strategy, bringing decades of experience in business strategy as well as deep experience in comprehensive wealth management to individuals, families, business owners, and executives across 25 states. As Founder, Senior Partner and Chief Investment Officer, Hale oversees WHZ's investment philosophy and portfolio strategy, combining rigorous market analysis with a personalized client focus. Langevin, as Managing Partner, Advisory, plays a central leadership role overseeing advisory strategy while continuing to serve clients directly.

"Having three of our advisors recognized on Forbes SHOOK's Best-In-State list is an incredible validation of what we've built together at WHZ," said Zahansky. "This recognition reflects the commitment our entire team brings to every client relationship; the deep planning, the strategic thinking, and the genuine care that defines everything we do. We maintain a 99 percent client retention rate because we treat every client's financial future as if it were our own."

"Being named to this list, alongside my partners Jim and Leisl, speaks to the culture of excellence we've cultivated as a firm," said Hale. "We never take these recognitions for granted. They remind us of our driving focus: to provide the best possible wealth management experience for our clients, at every touchpoint and through every stage of life."

"Being recognized on both lists this year is deeply meaningful to me," said Langevin. "It reflects the trust our clients place in us every day. At WHZ, financial planning is about far more than numbers — it's about listening, educating, and building financial confidence for our clients. I'm so passionate about that, and I'm proud to be part of a team where that commitment runs so deep."

The triple recognition comes after a string of other such recognitions in recent years for all three advisors. Laurence Hale has earned the Five Star Wealth Manager distinction for 12 consecutive years (2014-2025), and Zahansky and Langevin have also earned the distinction in every year that they were eligible (2019-2025 and 2021-2025 respectively)*. Langevin was also ranked 34th on Forbes' 2026 Top Women Wealth Advisors Best-In-State list and named to the Hartford Business Journal's 40 Under Forty list in 2023.

These achievements for WHZ come at a pivotal moment in the wealth management industry, with an unprecedented generational wealth transfer underway. Approximately $84 trillion in wealth is expected to pass from baby boomers to Gen X, millennials, and Gen Z over the coming decades.

"At WHZ we've made it a priority to provide tailored planning strategies that address the unique financial challenges and opportunities that individuals and families will face during this transition and beyond, and I think it's that individual attention along with our strategic approach that's behind our firm's continued evolution and growth as well as these types of industry recognitions," Zahansky said.

WHZ Strategic Wealth Advisors is an independent, fiduciary asset management firm serving individuals, families, business owners, executives, and not-for-profit institutions from offices in Pomfret Center and Tolland, Connecticut. Putnam Rotary installs more music on the River Trail

PUTNAM — Simple fact: You can't have too much creativity. Members of the Putnam Rotary Club last week added four more instruments to the River Trail near Simonzi Park. Three or four years ago the club put a colorful set of musical instruments on the trail. This year, using Rotary grant funds, the club's budget and about $5,000 left over from former President Amanda Kelly's year, four more delightful metal instruments joined the original ones. Rotarian Karen Osbrey, who has spearheaded the effort for several years, said ordering the Musical Gardens pieces required patience. It took a couple months of checking, but finally the four she had picked out went on special — no shipping. That wait turned out to be a good thing because one of the instruments, in the form of a dragonfly, wasn't even available originally. This spot was chosen by Kelly, right next to the original set. A set has already been installed by the club at Pomfret Community School and at the public school's playground area in Thompson. The intent is to put one in each of the club's five service area towns. Incoming President Martha Paquette would like to put one in Roseland Park in Woodstock next year, if all the renovations are finished there. That would leave Eastford. Rotarians Doug Porter and Woody Durst helped install the instruments. Whatever challenge presented itself, they worked through as a team to get it done. Passers-by were trying them out, even before all four of the instruments were finished.

REGION — The Quiet Corner Garden Club continues planting white oak trees in celebration of America 250 with the help of Scout Troops. A grant from National Garden Club's Plant America program and funds raised from the Club's Annual Plant Sale were used to purchase the trees. In April, trees were planted in Danielson, Pomfret and Woodstock.

The white oak was selected in part because of its long-lived nature, which symbolizes the continuing strength, endurance, resilience, and continuing growth of the United States as it celebrates 250 years as a nation and looks forward to the next 250 years.

This project also has ecological and historical significance to this area. The white oak is Connecticut's state tree, honoring the Charter Oak, a majestic white oak that grew in the state capital of Hartford and in which American colonists hid Connecticut's Royal Charter in 1687, to prevent its confiscation by British authorities. A violent storm felled the Charter Oak in 1856, when it was an estimated 500-600 years old.

VEGETABLE GARDENS

Members of Cub Scout Pack 21 of Putnam transplanted their own personal vegetable gardens during their weekly meeting on Wednesday, May 20. Back on March 25, expert gardener Jim Tetreault taught the Cub Scouts how to prepare containers of soil and plant tomato, lettuce and beet seeds. They took their planted seeds home and raised them up to seedlings indoors until now, when Mr. Tetreault showed the children how to put them into buckets of compost and plant them outside for the growing season. This is just one of the many fun and challenging activities Cub Scout Pack 21 does throughout the year, all under experienced adult supervision. Pack 21 welcomes boys and girls ages five through ten. To join, call John Ryan, at (860) 928-5873.

those in attendance as he reflected on how life can change in an instant and encouraged classmates to embrace life's unexpected challenges.

Valedictorian Ethan Graham spoke about the importance of stepping outside of one's comfort zone in order to achieve success. He shared his own experience of taking a chance by attending Putnam Science Academy and the opportunities that followed.

Salutatorian Cecile Lufungula focused her remarks on gratitude, thanking everyone who supported her throughout her educational journey.

The Class of 2026 represented the global diversity that has become a hallmark of Putnam Science Academy. Students came from more than 30 countries and throughout the United States, including local communities such as Shrewsbury (MA), Webster (MA), Pomfret, and Norwich.

"This class was filled with unbelievable kids," said Thomas Espinosa, the school's athletic director. "This was the 24th graduation and the 24th graduation that I've attended. I've been the longest-serving employee at the school. This class goes down as one of the best in school history, and I felt graduation day ranked in the top five all-time."

Espinosa added, "I can't wait to see what the future holds for these young men and women. They surely will be missed on Maple Street."

As graduates celebrated with family and friends, the ceremony marked not just the end of their time at Putnam Science Academy, but the beginning of new journeys ahead.

form. They will continue to consult with officials on the state level and when they inform Troop D of a call, it will go right up to additional authorities to streamline the process towards an official investigation. The district also updated visitor access procedures and supervision practices.

Both Drake and Nash stressed the importance of being deliberate in their messaging as well to make sure that all the information is shared properly, condemning early reporting of incidents on social media prior to official releases from school leadership.

"It's really important that what we share with the community is accurate and up to date and has all the most relevant information," said Drake. "We take time when crafting that. We make sure the information we share captures what police allow us to share because we have to be careful with that as well, so we take that into consideration, and we follow the feedback of our local responders."

"Once we know we are secure and we are doing our due diligence for investigation with police and the FBI, we then start crafting our message to families and we want to make sure we are deliberate in what we are saying, and clear, and precise, and that takes a little bit of time," added Nash, who said early reporting without official statements from the district can cause panic among families and residents.

On May 15, two days after the Board of Education meeting, the administration and board released an official joint statement laying out the different measures taken over recent weeks to address these swatting incidents, many of which have been reflected in this story.

Among the members are two Quiet Corner representatives: Mary Calorio and Eric Protulis.

Calorio is a Regional Town Administrator, President of the Connecticut Council of Small Towns, and Director of Transit at the Northeastern Connecticut Council of Governments.

She serves Canterbury, Chaplin and Pomfret.

Protulis is the Executive Director of EASTCONN, one of Connecticut's six Regional Education Service Centers, which provides educational and related ser-

Patrick graduated at the top of his class at Pomfret Community School and won a full scholarship to Pomfret School. He graduated as valedictorian in 2001 with perfect SAT scores and went on to graduate from Stanford with honors.

"Most importantly, Patrick was loving, kind, and humble about his gifts," Rimer said. "But depression overpowered his brilliance and goodness."

Patrick passed away in 2006 and now represents the need for mental health and suicide awareness. His story is explained in Rimer's memoir, "Back from Suicide: Before and After the Essential Patrick," available on Amazon.

Rimer will be giving a presentation on the book and the stages of suicide at the Eastford Library, Wednesday, Sept. 16, 6 p.m. More information is available on: <https://www.backfromsuicide.com>.

A birthday reflection: Looking back, living forward

TIPS FOR SUCCESS
MIKE BOGDANSKI

A few weeks ago, I celebrated my birthday. I am usually a look-forward kind of guy, but this one pulled me back — deeper than most.

On birth and love
As a father, I marveled at the birth of my own child. Now, as a father and grandfather, I find myself wondering what it must have felt like for my parents on the day I arrived — I am second born, one year after my sister Jean.

What I know for certain is this: the day our grandchildren were born, I fell instantly in love with them. And then, inexplicably, that love has grown every single day since. I still don't know how that happens.

My roots
My parents were house builders and realtors — hardworking, driven, and dedicated to building a great life for our family. Because they were always busy, I spent much of my childhood with my maternal grandmother. She raised us with enormous love, treated us like her own, and instilled in us a deep respect for our Polish heritage. She always spoke to us in her native language.

A few months ago, I had the chance to travel to Poland on an ancestral tour to visit the birthplaces of my grandparents. Every time I heard or spoke a little Polish, I was transported right back to her kitchen, to her love. I even have a video of her holding my one-week-old son James, saying:

"I can't believe I am holding your son."

Yes, Babci — I know exactly how you feel.

I never met my paternal grandfather; he passed before I was born. I recently came across his wedding photo and was struck by our resemblance. It left me with so many questions I can no longer ask.

Growing up
By age 12, I had lived in a dozen houses — my parents were always building, selling, and moving us on to the next one. It was an unusual childhood, but it taught me adaptability early.

My teen years had some turbulence. Bullied and beaten up as a teenager, that experience changed the course of my life. It became fuel for a mission that still drives me: helping kids who've suffered the same kind of trauma, and guiding them from hate toward hope. I graduated from Norwich Free Academy, and while high school had its ups and downs, I had great friends who helped me, many of whom I'm still in touch with today.

My parents were my bedrock in life. My Mom preached, "Think positive." My Dad passed on entrepreneurial spirit and his sharp mind, even though he had to drop out of high school after one year to go to work — something he always regretted.

Karate changed everything

Who could have predicted that karate would reshape my life and career so completely? It gave me confidence, national and international championships, a world of travel, and friendships that have lasted decades. I am still best friends with Grandmaster Steve Best, whom I met at age 18. I still teach an occasional karate class, and love every minute.

Career, community, and coming home

I started my career in guidance counseling, wanting to help kids. For many decades later, I did exactly that — teaching martial arts, empathy, and anti-bullying skills whenever I could. I also spent many years running a gym that served people of all ages to improve their health and longevity.

After college, I tried Los Angeles for several months. I confirmed quickly that I am, at heart, a small-town guy. I've lived in Ledyard, Norwich, New Britain, Killingly, and Woodstock, but several years ago, my wife Linda and I knew: we are Putnam people, through and through. The people of Putnam and northeast Connecticut have been extraordinarily good to us. I'm proudly giving back as a former small-business owner, Putnam advocate, and selectman.

The travel bug
My parents gave me the travel bug. My first trip to Europe was at age 12 — with Mom cleverly weaving history into every turn in London, Poland, and Paris. She made sure we saw Auschwitz, and the experience pierced my soul in a way I will never forget (Lesson learned, Mom).

Looking back, living forward

Now, in my '70s, I find myself thinking about legacy. About a life that has been, by any measure, extraordinarily blessed — full of love, purpose, friendship, and meaning.

And yes — I'm still called Mr. Miyagi by a certain radio personality, and "Karate Kid" by the Putnam senior group. Some things never change.

Mother's Day has passed, and Father's Day is coming up fast. I do have a few tips for you. If you have your parents and grandparents around, please write them a letter about what they mean to you. Write it with love and appreciation. I know they will love it.

If you are a parent or grandparent, record a thoughtfully scripted video about your life and the things you appreciate in this rapidly moving time. Record your legacy with some of the questions you may have wanted to know from your parents or grandparents that you regret never asking.

Woodstock's Poet Laureate releases new book

WOODSTOCK — W.H. Auden said about poetry, "there is only one thing / that all poetry must do; it must praise all it can for being / and for happening." For 40 years, Robert Cording's poems have sought to praise a world that need not be, but is. His poems embrace what cannot be changed: that living brings us face-to-face with suffering and injustice, beauty and grace.

From the start, his work has explored three questions: Why does it feel that life is "good," even in the face of so much suffering and grief? How can he be grateful for what he has been given despite the almost daily onslaught of affliction and sorrow in the world? How, finally, can he not only embrace, but praise the opposing sides of what's possible: the utter grief and utter joy of being alive?

In the words of poet Eamon Grennan, Cording is always "transforming his naturalist's scrutiny of the world into moral interrogation, bringing to our attention, in poem after poem, 'the strangeness we were born to.'"

What's Possible: New and Selected Poems makes clear what many have long known: that Robert Cording is among his generation's finest poets, and that his work has been both deeply consistent and yet constantly evolving. Here is a poet both unsparing and generous, a voice that has always heeded Shakespeare's injunction to "speak what we feel, not what we ought to say."

Robert Cording is professor emeritus at College of the Holy Cross where he taught for 38 years and served as the Barrett Chair of English and Creative Writing. After his retirement, he worked for five years as a poetry mentor in the Seattle Pacific University low residency MFA program. He has published ten collections of poems, the most recent of which is In the Unwalled City (Slant). Three of his books were finalists for the Connecticut Book Award, and "Walking with Ruskin" (CavanKerry Press) was also a runner-up for the Poet's Prize.

OBITUARIES

Putnam - Dr. Francoise Gauthier, 81, of Putnam, passed away suddenly on Sunday May 3, 2026, at Matulaitis Rehabilitation Center. Born August 3, 1944 in Biddeford, Maine, she was the only child of Raymond and Viola (Pomerleau) Gauthier. After graduating from St Bernard High School in New London, Francoise entered the Daughters of the Holy Spirit. She was then known as Sr. Raymond Francoise. She received her BA in education from Annhurst College and a MA in Spanish Language and Literature from Universidad Ibero-Americana in Mexico. Francoise also received 2 PhD degrees: Biblical Theology from I.B.I.S in Orlando, Fl. and Theology and Parish Administration from the International Seminary, also in Florida.

Francoise began her ministry in education as a teacher and assistant principal at All Hallows School in Moosup. She continued as a teacher at Putnam Catholic Academy then a professor of Spanish and English at Annhurst College. From 1983 to 1995 she served as principal at St Mary School in Putnam and again from 2006 until it closed in 2010.

Francoise separated canonically from the Daughters of the Holy Spirit in 1998 but remained attached in her heart. In 2001, what started as a part-time summer job coordinating the cars and drivers at the Provincial House eventually led to taking on the role of Development Director, a task she was still fulfilling at the time of her death. In that role, she coordinated with many individuals and groups, including the Knights of Columbus.

She loved to travel and her fluency in French, Spanish, Italian and some Portuguese and German helped. Her proficiency in languages was an additional asset as she translated numerous documents and meetings, both large and small, for religious congregations, especially the Daughters of the Holy Spirit and the Bon Secour Sisters in Baltimore for over 25 years.

Under her stern, no nonsense exterior was a generous spirit. She shared her time, talent and resources with a vast network of friends who will miss her greatly.

Calling hours will be on Wednesday June 3, 2026, from 9:30 to 11:00 at Holy Trinity Church, 568 Pomfret St., Pomfret, CT. A Mass of Christian Burial will be held there at 11:00 AM followed by burial at St Mary Cemetery in Putnam.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to DHS Retirement Fund, P.O. Box 497, Putnam, CT 06260 or Interfaith Human Services of Putnam, Inc., 53 Grove St, Putnam, CT 06260 for Daily Bread of the Greater Putnam Area. The Gilman Funeral Home and Crematory, 104 Church St., Putnam, CT is in charge of arrangements.

In this roll he helped young men develop civic leadership and pride in American citizenship. He was a longtime member of the Security team at the Woodstock Fair. "Every Labor Day Weekend!!" Because of his friendly nature, this role suited him well.

Wayne attended Bridgewater State College (MA) for both his undergraduate degree and for his master's degree. Over the years he taught Physics, Math, and played a part in the development of STEM programs. He helped write the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, MCAS, for STEM, (Science, Technology, Engineering, Mathematics). He began his teaching career at Norwich Technical High School in Norwich CT. He taught at Dimond High School in Fall River, MA, Walpole High School in Walpole MA, Milford High School in Milford, MA and retired from Uxbridge High School in Uxbridge MA.

Harriette F. Wolslegel 1937 - 2025

Woodstock - Harriette Felicia Wolslegel of Woodstock and recently, Brooklyn, CT, died Christmas morning after a brief illness and wonderful life. Born in Woonsocket, Rhode Island, on December 7, 1937, she grew up during World War II and the happy days of the 1950s. From the age of 18 to 20 she worked at Rhode Island Hospital as a phlebotomist, where her gentle caring nature flourished. Daughter of Armand and Angela Lizotte, and sister of Larry, Barbra and Shelly, she met her loving husband, Walter at a University of Rhode Island dance and hayride in the fall of 1956. Married two years later to the day, they remained lovingly devoted to each other for the next 67 years.

Harriette and Walter (92) raised five children who will miss her dearly: Thomas (66) married to Marianne, William (65) married to Lisa, Steven (64) married to Jeanne, Kenneth (61) married to Mae, and Kristen. Five grandchildren all grew in character and depth because of their loving grandmother: Nicholas (28), Krista (25), Olivia (25), Sofia (13) and Benjamin (12). The grandchildren will especially miss their Nanna's kindness and her famous tea parties.

Deeply devoted to her family and faith, she was a true instrument of peace. Her vast circle of friends was fed by her nature - "it is in giving that we receive". In the 1980s as her kids pursued college and career, she worked as the church secretary at Saint Philips Catholic Church in Ashford, CT. During this time, she also served as regional president of Aglow International, a worldwide organization that spread biblical principles as solutions to the challenging issues of our time.

She loved traveling to warm places in the winter, first to Palm Springs, CA, then to Florida, where she and Walter built a home in Port Charlotte. Her love of gardening, flowers and a natural green thumb that could make anything grow, was a source of great peace. She cooked from scratch, and raised her children on the vegetables she and Walter grew themselves. Even at 87, she still loved tending her son's garden and would get right down to the soil and feel the earth and nature in her hands.

Everything about Harriette's make-up as a human being and her example as a daughter, sister, wife, mother, aunt, grandmother and friend was just as it should have been. Her whole life she helped other people grow, heal and succeed, never seeking the spotlight for herself. She was the best listener, and many friends expressed: "she always made me feel I was the most important person in the world". Her wonderful sense of humor allowed her to freely laugh at herself. She even was her children's first "rock star", playing acoustic guitar and singing to them when they were young. She was creative and artful and always made the space she lived in more beautiful. Humility, dignity, selflessness, and unfailing love emanated from her eyes, all the way to her last moments. Even her death created beauty and healing for her family, allowing them to learn from not just her profound life, but from her graceful loving departure from this world.

Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to attend a Mass of Christian Burial on Saturday June 6, 2026, at 10:00AM in St. Philip Church, 64 Pompey Hollow Rd., Ashford, CT, burial to follow in Barlow Cemetery, Woodstock. Arrangements have been entrusted to the Gilman Funeral Home & Crematory, 104 Church St., Putnam, CT. For memorial guestbook please visit www.GilmanAndValade.com.
